ELLEN'S DIARY

Our Forebearers Faithfully Respected The Sabbath

Saturday brings our weekend. Now the serenity which comes before it on Island farms, declares that Sunday nears. With the stroke of midnight, dawns our Day of Rest Tomorrow, no work will be done. Only the necessary doings, those duties peculiar to our occupation; animals tended, chores done. The farmwives, we think have respected this today, when preparing meals. They, as we sometimes do with Peter's, put Sunday's name in the cooking pots in order that its meals may be served with a minimum of work on their part. Not that the effort entailed would be exacting, but perhaps, because in our childhood our upbringing advised against it.

How faithfully our forebears respected the day? Farmers left the machines of the hay on Saturday evening, not to do impatiently the next day, nor to presume to scan wind or weather, but to observe their Sabbath. Even the center of the horses, with the damp of sweat indicating the marks of the harness of their day's field-work, when let to pasture seemed to tell of an interval of freedom for them. Were they aware that nothing would be asked of them in the hours ahead? Unless for one there might be a "Sabbath Day's Journey" or the Church was at such a distance, the trip required it. Otherwise, folks walked to services.

There was naturally no work to that. It was a privilege, a delight through the summer's Sundays. And what if sermons were over-long, or over a little girl's head? Here and there was manna for her. Only a phrase, maybe, of those inimitable ones so long ago written, and read by the minister — beautiful pictures for her found in the fitting words: "...in green pastures beside still waters... upon a thousand hills... as the hart panteth after the water brooks... when the harvest was come... they did eat... thy going out... a lamp unto my feet... to keep thee, in all thy ways." How lovely!

Did the little organ wheeze. Some older folks, said so. But for her it made great music. Because the rapid expression on the face of the organist who watched her notes intently, declared it was of heavenly places "High and lifted up", as she contributed no small share to the service.

Now the week passing, was it not one of summer's best? Favorable to the haying, and also for all fieldwork for the first of the digging, which gives the fresh new potatoes to our tables. Pleasant too it was for the homecomers and the tourists, who, as we see it, besides leaving his dollars, leaves with folks nice memories of his courtesy, and by large his appreciation of the Island's charm. We ourselves are so busy we perhaps give little thought to this — or to the everyday sights and sounds and the humble items and doings that attend our farm-life. To-night however, some reminders us, that in the long ago — "One there was who, passing by, touched all life with alchemy, Grass of field, or birds of air, Made His heart of God aware. Of common salt, or smooth worn yoke A figure patterned for eager folk; Of wayside spring or granary, Symbols He made, which never die. From mustard seed to branchy vine, Similitudes of things divine. Meaning to leavening dough, He made, of bread, a sacrament." — Diary

Good-night...

Fourth Book Is Published By 98 Year Old

MONTREAL (CP)—A 98-year-old poet who writes in both English and French will make her own personal contribution to Canada's centennial celebrations by having her fourth volume of poetry published.

Mrs. Christine Henderson, a small, cheerful woman, described the book, entitled Montreal Skyline, as "a lovely book for the Expo year, because it deals with historic people like Madeleine de Verperes and Brother Marie Victoin, founder of the Montreal Botanical Gardens."

Montreal Skyline will be the product of experiences gathered over a long period. Mrs. Henderson said, "I wrote Montreal Skyline, the one, about two years ago, but the other 50 or so I've been writing over the years."

Composing verse in either one of two languages apparently presents few problems for Mrs. Henderson, who first became fluent in French while a child in Ormstown, Que. about 85 miles south of Montreal.

The white-haired poet found her second language useful because later, I worked as a French specialist in Hemmingford, at the magnificent sum of $25 a month. But that was in 1888, and rent was $10 a month."

WENT IN FOR TRAVEL

Mrs. Henderson also speaks Italian and German, learned during several trips abroad. Although she admits to being "rusty" in the two tongues because "I haven't the chance to practice."

Mrs. Henderson's first poems were composed while she was travelling following her husband's death after 17 years of marriage.

She recalled that "I didn't have any children, and I wondered what to do with myself." A widow in Hemmingford, in the Eastern Townships about 40 miles south of Montreal, suggested she take up baking as a pastime.

"That was when I decided that I wasn't going to spend my time baking, so I decided to travel. I was in Austria, on my first trip to Europe, when I became lonely, and since I couldn't read the German newspaper, I wrote a poem."

Other poems have followed that first one, as well as three published books: Ship's Wake, England Remembered and Thoughtful Children.

Now, Mrs. Henderson no longer travels, and doesn't leave her west-end Montreal apartment often, but, despite failing eyesight, she keeps busy watching television, entertaining friends and making appearances on radio and television to read her poetry.
