The New Extradition Treaty.

In future cases of burglary, manslaughter, embezzlement or larceny to the value of $50 or £10 and upwards, and malicious injury to property whereby the life of any person has been endangered, will be extraditable offences under the provisions of the new treaty.

Improvements.

DURING his vacation—a lucid interval—the editor of the Moncton Transcript has been enabled to see some of the improvements which are going on. In his "vacation notes" we have a pleasing account of a recent visit to the Island Province.

"Charlottetown is in many respects a fine city. During the past twenty years it has improved greatly in appearance, and many fine brick and stone buildings have taken the place of the wooden structures that existed when the writer was a type in the Post's Weekly and Patriot offices.

"The disadvantages under which the public labor on account of being compelled to use the present temporary Post Office should not be unnecessarily prolonged. The Post Office Department might be ready for occupancy in three months from date, but judging from the present indications it will be fully fifteen or perhaps eighteen months before we obtain the use of it.

"We are reminded that an important feature in connection with the Orange Circulars has not yet been elucidated. It might, by some persons, be taken for granted that because they have not been denied the statements in the so-called 'Facts for Protestants' are true. We are informed by a Priest that they are 'lies from beginning to end.' No oath is taken by Priest or layman; and the alleged traditions are fictions.

IN ENGLAND!

At Warwick Castle and Stratford-on-Avon.

A Trip Through the Midland Counties.

LONDON, July 10, 1886.

YOUR correspondent has just returned to London from a four-days' jaunt into the heart of Old England, during which he had a very fair opportunity of comparing rural life on this side of the Atlantic with what it is in our tight little isle of Prince Edward.

OXFORD, the great seat of English learning, was our first point of stopping after leaving London along with the Colonial and Indian excursionists, some 150 strong. Here we were most hospitably received by the University and town dignitaries, presented with a couple of addresses, given a grand banquet and driven to all the points of interest.

AT LEAMINGTON we were received with open arms, the entire town flocking to the depot and along the route to the chief hotels. Decorations abounded on all hands, flags floated from every available height, arches spanned the streets, and flowers and bunting were used in lavish profusion.

BIRMINGHAM which was "done" on the second day is the metropolis of the midland counties of England, and is famous for the extent, excellence and variety of its manufactures.

WARWICK CASTLE, Guy's Cliffe, Kenilworth and Stoneleigh. At Warwick Castle we were met by Lord Brooke, eldest son of the present earl, who escorted the party through "the finest monument of ancient and chivalrous splendor," as Sir Walter Scott called it.

by Sir Walter Scott. The outer wall originally enclosed seven acres. The castle was built by Geoffrey de Clinton, chamberlain and treasurer to Henry I., and was bestowed by Elizabeth on her lover Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, who expended £60,000 in repairs, improvements, and in entertaining his queen in a style of sumptuous magnificence of which we have no example in modern times.

SHAKESPEARE'S BIRTHPLACE, in Henley Street, where we spent several never-to-be-forgotten hours, and of course many changes have swept over this house since the days when the "gentle William" was a boy.
