his being—to whom he was indebted for care and protection in boyhood, and the helpless hours of infancy, and against whom the feelings of nature and the laws of God should have prevented his raising his hand in anger. Such a crime is almost too horrible to contemplate. But gentlemen, it is my duty to state, that the greater and more horrible the crime, so much the greater should be your deliberation in receiving evidence of the guilt of the prisoner.

It will appear from the evidence, that on the 3d March last, a large party were assembled at the house of the prisoner at the bar, to celebrate the marriage of his daughter. The deceased was present. He was aged and a cripple unable to walk without the aid of crutches, and was placed in a large arm chair at the end of the table near the fireplace. He asked the prisoner's wife for some tea, which she refused to give him, and for some water, which was also refused. Some words then arose between them, and Mrs. Henderson told her husband, the prisoner, that the old man would not be quiet. The prisoner therefore seized an iron poker and brandishing it over the head of the deceased, threatening to strike him if he did not hold his tongue. The prisoner's attitude was so menacing, that several of the guests, fearing mischief to the old man, caught up whatever him, and a fierce struggle ensued, and the poker was taken away. I do not think we shall be able to prove that any blow was actually struck, at this time, with the poker, although some of the bystanders thought a blow had been struck. Shortly afterwards the prisoner made a rush at the old man, seized him by the hair of the head, helpless and infirm as he was, dragged him from his chair, and threw him violently on the hearth. The old man was again placed in his chair—the prisoner again rushed at him; again seized him by the hair of the head, pulled him from it, and dragged the old man across the floor and hearth. It will appear, I believe, that here some of the bystanders again interfered and placed the old man on a bed in the room, his chin and face bleeding, and his knees cut by the brutal violence he had received. When the old man was on the bed, he sat up, and the prisoner went to him again and struck him on the face and on the top and side of his head with his two fists clenched, cutting his face above the right eye and blackening both his eyes. It will also appear that, previous to the night in question the deceased had an enlargement on the right side of his neck, and I think the evidence will show that when the prisoner struck the deceased with his fists, he struck one or two blows on or near to the affected part. This enlargement shortly afterwards formed an abscess, which, on the 17th March, broke, and from his death, which took place on the 19th March, proceeded. It is necessary, gentlemen, that you should first be satisfied as to the cause of death. We shall, therefore, produce Dr. Hoskirk, and Dr. M'Cousin, who will testify to you that they made a post-mortem examination of the body of the deceased; that they are satisfied that his death was caused by the abscess; and that, in their opinion, this abscess must have been produced by a blow. And on the examination of the medical gentlemen, I shall not only require from them their opinion, that the wounds on the face so founded. They will also testify to you that supposing the formation of the abscess to have commenced, blows given by the prisoner on the night in question near it, or on the same side, might so have aggravated the dripping as to have rendered it fatal when it would not otherwise have been so, and would at any rate have increased the inflamation and hasten the progress of the disease.

If you shall be satisfied, gentlemen, from this evidence; that the death of the deceased was caused by a blow; the question for you then to consider, will be, who struck it? I think we shall be able to prove to you who gave it, by declarations made by the deceased shortly before his death. If a question may arise respecting this part of the evidence, I shall at this stage of the case forbear entering further into it.

But if we fail to show who struck the original blow, yet, if it is proved that on the night of the wedding, the prisoner struck the deceased on the affected parts, and so aggravated the injury as to cause or hasten his death, submit, under the direction of the Court, that it will be your duty to convict the prisoner. The Law requires proof of malice in cases of this kind. In this instance, the cruel conduct of the prisoner sufficiently shows it.

I have now stated to you the evidence; and, if in doing so, have been led to express some feeling of horror at the crime, it has not been done with the view of prejudicing the prisoner's case. Again I say do not allow anything you have heard before to day, operate against him, but confine yourself to the evidence. The Law mercifully will presume him innocent, until your verdict establishes his guilt. But in grading yourself from bias against the prisoner, you must not lean so much into the other extreme. If the evidence shall be strong and conclusive, and sufficient to satisfy your minds, you will be bound to discharge your duty, painful as it is, and find the prisoner guilty. But if, on the other hand, the evidence shall be insufficient, and there shall be doubts as to his guilt, you will give him the benefit of them; and if anything appears to fix that horrible crime upon him, I shall be very glad to see him acquitted of the charge. And now I will proceed to the examination of the Witnesses.

HENDERSON'S TRIAL.—We give in this day's issue the opening of the case by the Attorney General, and in our next will lay before the public the evidence produced against him. The excitement and bustle of the past week has prevented us from attending to it sooner.

The two stud Horses appropriated for this Country, were sold to day, and purchased by the following persons :—

Blood Horse, Neil M'Innis £85.

Twelvetrees Brothers' Soap Powder

(an entirely new invention.)

IS the cheapest, safest, best, and most effectual article for all washing purposes, a packet of which is equal to 7lbs. of the best Soap!

The saving of Time and Labour is so astonishingly great, that a WEEK'S WASH can be accomplished BEFORE BREAKFAST —no rubbing nor boiling required.

This wonderful Article is MORE SERVICEABLE THAN SOAP, as it produces a better and much quicker lather, and is adapted for purposes for which Soap cannot be safely or effectually used.

It will not injure the hands, or the most delicate material; but whilst it is incomparable for permanently whitening Linens, &c., after they have become discoloured by age, or injured by bad Washing, it is also unsurpassable for improving the tints of FLANNELS, BLANKETS, WOOLLENS, Colored PRINTS, MUSLIN and LACE.
