Freddie Bartholomew Son Of Canadian War Veteran

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire) OTTAWA, May 5—Freddie Bartholomew, 12-year-old British film star who won overnight fame as the orphan in the screen play based on Charles Dickens' David Copperfield, has received an annual allowance all his life from the Canadian government. It was learned today from a reliable source.

Cecil Llewellyn Bartholomew, the boy's father, was learned, enlisted at Toronto in 1916 in the Royal Canadian Dragoons, went to England and was drafted to the 10th Battalion, C. E. F. He was wounded in one knee so severely that physicians were forced to amputate his leg.

As the son of a war veteran receiving a disability allowance, Freddie and his sisters Eileen and Hilda, were entitled to allowances from the Canadian Department of Pensions. The scale of allowance is $180 for the first child, $320 for two children and $120 more for each additional child.

Freddie's pay is reputed to be $1,500 a week, but it could not be ascertained if he was likely to lose his allowance due to his large earnings. Ordinarily he would be entitled to it until he is 16.

Make Charge Against Radio Commission

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire) OTTAWA, May 5—Failure to live up to an agreement entered into in August 1934 was charged against the Canadian Radio Commission today by the Montreal Musicians Federation in a brief presented by S. B. Dunlop, head of the Montreal local, to the House of Commons radio committee.

It was charged the Commission, during the general strike of musicians in 1934, agreed to accept the Federation scale of wages and working conditions, as a result of which the strike was called off. The Commission, Mr. Dunlop said, had carried out its undertaking with respect to employing union musicians but in Montreal had failed to live up to the pay schedules agreed upon and had in other ways discriminated against the union which has 600 members in Montreal.

W. M. Murdoch of Toronto, appearing for the Canadian Federation of Musicians, affiliated with the American Federation of Musicians, said the only point in Canada where there had been complaints of discrimination by the Commission against union musicians was in Montreal. Elsewhere in Canada, so far as he knew, the Commission was living up to the agreement.

disaster for the implement industry of Canada and that means the jobs of 18,000 men are threatened today.

A general attack on the capitalist system was launched by J. S. Woodsworth, leader of the C. C. F. group. He warned the finance minister it was futile to expect Canada or any other country to emerge from the depression until a co-operative or Socialist state was created.

Mr. Bennett protested against the disastrous results which he believed would follow the budget proposal to permit free importation of $100 worth of goods by Canadians spending 48 hours in foreign countries. It practically turned Canada into a free-trade area and it would be possible for scores of millions of dollars worth of goods to be imported free.

As a man who travelled sometimes, he would welcome the change and he had no doubt it would be extremely popular "but this country must learn there are many things we would like to do which we should not do."

Charges Discrimination

The government discriminated against Alberta in turning down its application for a loan after its loan-council scheme was rejected. Mr. Bennett declared. It was unfair to submit one scheme to all provinces and then, when it was rejected by Alberta, leading to a bond default, modify its terms.

On the general topic of conversion, the Conservative leader gave his opinion a general scheme, involving the Dominion, Provinces, and municipalities, and railways, would be impossible until there were real signs of recovery.

Turning to tariff reductions, he asked if it was fair to reduce duties on farm implements from 12 to 1-2 per cent to 7 1-2 per cent when a parliamentary committee was formed to study the whole industry and before manufacturers had the opportunity to present their arguments. Reductions on gasoline and automobiles resulted from tariff board hearings but "why should the agricultural implement industry be singled out for treatment of that kind. In his judgment 7 1-2 per cent protection was too low.

Countervailing duties, introduced in the budget on eggs, potatoes and cut flowers indicated "the cowardice of an administration which is afraid to raise a duty."

The United States Congress was not interested in tariffs this session and the President had no power to reduce them.

He congratulated Finance Minister Dunning on the presentation of his budget and its form.

In 1930 Mr. Dunning was unable to foresee the depression, the Conservative leader said, and today he was over-estimating the return of prosperity.

The Liberal Government which came into office in October could take no credit for the "great improvement" in economic conditions at the end of 1935, Mr. Bennett said. That should be credited to the Conservative administration which was defeated at the polls.

There was a "complete vindication" for his government's trade policies in the fact Canada went up from eighth to sixth among world trading nations, he declared.

The Liberals laughed at this statement, Mr. Bennett told them they could laugh but they could not change the trading record nor take credit for the policies that led to it.

During the depression world trade fell to 34.3 per cent of the 1929 level, Mr. Bennett said, quoting League of Nations figures. In 1929 Canada had 3.71 per cent of the world's export trade; 1930, 3.42; 1931, 3.29; 1932, 3.78; 1933, 3.59; 1934, 3.99; 1935, 4.32. This showed an actual increase in 1935 over 1929.

Of the world's import trade Canada had 3.65 per cent in 1929; 3.47 in 1930; 2.91 in 1931; 2.75 in 1932; 2.28 in 1933; 2.60 in 1934; and 2.71 in 1935.

In general trade, Canada had 2.68 per cent of the world total in 1929; 3.45 in 1930; 3.09 in 1931; 3.24 in 1932; 2.94 in 1933; 3.27 in 1934 and 3.49 in 1935.

During the last few years the government modified to a great extent the visible balance of Canadian trade. The commodity balance of trade, exclusive of gold, had been running steadily against Canada before the Conservatives came into office in 1930.

In 1929 there was an unfavorable balance of $17,000,000 and in 1931, the first year the Conservatives were in office, it had decreased to $10,000,000. By 1932 it had been changed into a favorable balance of $49,000,000. The favorable balance then increased to $136,000,000 in 1933, $146,000,000 in 1934 and $192,000,000 in 1935.

"It has been said he raised the tariff," said Mr. Bennett. "We certainly did. We took steps that were necessary to safeguard the integrity of this country."

Faced Unfair Competition

Canada at that time was faced with competition from disorganized industries in the United States which were seeking markets for their surplus. Every increase in imports meant loss of jobs for Canadians. Increases in the tariff did not necessarily mean increase in prices to the consumer.

Undertakings were obtained from manufacturers not to increase prices and were observed to the letter.

The manufacturers had more than lived up to their undertaking for they had reduced prices in increasing prices when there were increases in the United States.

"There was no rise in prices to the Canadian farmer until the United States agreement was signed when, of course, they were released from their obligations," Mr. Bennett said.

Implement prices in Canada and the United States were now about on a parity and in some cases Canadian prices were lower, he added. It was true unemployment increased under the new tariffs, Mr. Bennett continued, but he asked what would have resulted if the duties had not been raised.

Ottawa Trade Agreements

The next step was to sign the Ottawa trade agreements which were attacked bitterly by the Liberals. Despite this "I have lived long enough to hear the Finance Minister praise them."

Since 1932, the Canadian market for English goods was enlarged "slowly but surely," Mr. Bennett said. Between 1932 and 1935, 350 commodities were placed on the free list, other tariffs reduced and the excise tax abolished. They widened the door for Empire goods, at the same time preventing Canadians from being injured by the trade.

Reviewing other trade policies of his government, Mr. Bennett referred to the new French treaty, the German treaty, the Brazilian and Polish treaties.

Referring to the Japanese trade settlement, Mr. Bennett said it was a "complete vindication" of the national policy which was defeated at the polls.

The case of the foreign country was held good, the Minister of National Revenue over-ruled and held up to ridicule for having fixed a value that was erroneous.

Succeeding ministers of finance would have liked to establish the $100 tariff exemption for tourists but dared not take the risk, said Mr. Bennett. It should be realized now what the risk was.

No less than 2,530,000 people left Canada every year as travellers or tourists, to the United States or across the seas. Everyone of these people was now entitled to bring back $100 worth of goods from any favored nation such as the United States, Great Britain or France. If each one brought back only $20 worth that meant $50,000,000 free imports; if $40 worth, $100,000,000.

Financial Undertakings

Turning to financial undertakings of his government, Mr. Bennett said $650,000,000 in bonds were converted to a lower interest rate. Through creation of a central bank, the sale of treasury bills and other savings "we were able to reduce the annual interest charge of this country by $16,000,000." He wondered why Mr. Dunning gave no praise to his predecessors for this, but the finance minister said he did.

The Conservative leader said the people did not realize how the Central Bank made savings possible in Dominion financing. This was due largely to the sale of treasury notes for short terms at low rates. Side by side with this was a drive for lower interest rates, bank rates and loan rates.

His government loaned money to western provinces to save them from default, Mr. Bennett continued. This was in the darkest days of depression and was justifiable. It saved Canada's national credit, although he often thought the loans should not continue beyond a certain point.

Proposed Loan Council

Turning to the proposed loan council scheme, Mr. Bennett said it was unfair to Alberta to propose one scheme which was not final. The Dominion, he said, presented a proposal to all provinces and when Alberta declined and defaulted its bonds, modified it. This was unfair.

Finance Minister Dunning interrupted to say Alberta passed legislation for a forced conversion which altered the situation.

Mr. Bennett said he could not agree. The point was a proposal was changed and there seemed to be no finality.

"I have always felt that until such time as there are evident signs of substantial recovery there can be no real conversion of Dominion, provincial and municipal debts," said Mr. Bennett.

Spontaneous partial conversions could be carried on as in the past few days with considerable savings.

Mr. Bennett said the government should not ask the British Parliament to amend the British North America Act to permit of retroactive legislation with respect to loan councils. He also suggested to clothe the provinces with power to impose indirect taxation raised questions of the "utmost gravity."

The Conservative leader agreed with the budget statement Canada's two major problems were unemployment and railways.

The Canadian National Railways had a net loss of $115,000,000 last year but the government was doing nothing to solve this problem. The only thing was substitution of seven directors for three trustees.

He wondered if the government believed it was discharging its duty to the people on railways.

No one seemed greatly concerned about the drain on the treasury, Mr. Bennett said.

will receive as favorable treatment as the mining industry? If not why not?

There was two ways of moving towards a balanced budget, economies and increased taxes. The government had chosen increased taxes but had also effected some economies; but in its appointments to civil service positions it was adding to expenses. Many people had been added to the payroll since October above the number dismissed and every man who could be dismissed was dismissed to make way for Liberals.

"In my opinion," Mr. Bennett said, an eight-per-cent sales tax is a tax this country cannot bear. The capitalist system cannot bear it. Mr. Woodsworth must be rejoicing because he knows as well as anyone that nothing could strike a greater blow at capitalism than an eight-per-cent sales tax.

Small automobiles were now $18 higher in price as a result of the tax. The same increases were going into effect all along the line.

The Liberals did nothing to remove the sugar tax, Mr. Bennett continued, while his followers cheered him.

The Finance Minister said nothing would give him more pleasure than to remove that tax but he could not.

There could be no loss on what until the supplies were liquidated ultimately, Mr. Bennett said.

The Finance Minister said there was a definite loss on the guarantee given to Canadian Wheat Producers, Ltd., and it would increase.

Mr. Bennett repeated there could be no loss until the last bushel was sold and the account closed.

The Conservative leader agreed with the budget statement Canada's two major problems were unemployment and railways.

NEWS FOR MEN!

NEW YORK, May 4—"Men enjoy a wedding more than they used to; brides scarcely ever weep nowadays."

This came today from Marie Couderet Brenning, who has been supervising weddings for six years and is a sort of allround errand girl to cupid.

"I haven't seen a frightened bridegroom for ages," said Miss Brenning. "Men actually have begun to enjoy their weddings. One reason is that weddings go off today with few hitches."

Ms. Brenning, looking about for a job after she left college, decided to create a bureau that would "render any service to any bride."

She comes on call to a bride's home and directs the whole wedding from rehearsal to the placing of the ushers' boutonnières; she advises on wedding etiquette, she even manages wedding by mail.

The average New York society wedding costs $5,000, Miss Brenning estimated. She has managed six $35,000 weddings, but staged one that cost $29.75. This was in the Blue Ridge mountains of Virginia. She counselled the couple by mail.

One of the $35,000 brides paid $600 for her shoes.
