

United States Fisheries in 1879.

In the Annual Report of the Boston Fish Bureau, it is stated that the year just closed will long be remembered on many accounts, mainly for its unparalleled record of disasters, loss of life and property.

Of mackerel, the total catch of the Massachusetts fleet in 1879 is given at 156,125 barrels, against 144,205 barrels in 1878.

Of herring, there was an almost total failure of the Bonne Bay, Bay of Islands and Fortune Bay catch, with only a light catch off the coast of Labrador.

Of codfish, all the vessels engaged in fishing returned in safety with full fares. But the fleet was greatly reduced, and even with full fares, the total catch is not up to the average.

Of hake and haddock the receipts show a marked falling off. Of salmon there has also been a small decrease.

The total receipts of fish of all kinds during the year, while not varying much in the aggregate amount from the past few years, has been much more satisfactory and profitable to both producers and dealers.

The Argus says: In an article in the last Herald, abounding with sarcastic denunciations of things in general and Senator Carvell in particular, the editor goes far out of his way, to have a fling at a certain body of Christians in this city.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH ASSOCIATION.—The opening Lecture commences to-night at 8 o'clock, sharp. Free entrance and discussion to all persons who shall subscribe the rules.

"An Evil of the Day."

"Blood and Iron."—Bismarck. "Sleek and slobbering cattle."—Dobson. "Though not reckoned statisticians among our dangerous classes, yet are in truth a class both mischievous and dangerous to the intellectual and moral vigor of society, and even to the institutions of the country."—Clad Lane.

In the present day, there is no doubt that most persons make gods of their bellies to an extent that was never before imagined. Pampering their bodies in soft, self-indulgent and effeminate ease, they care not to restrain, and never think of restraining, any one of their inclinations.

Now a certain amount of self-denial in things lawful is a condition precedent to a steadfast character, a robust body and a well-poised mind. There can be no tough moral or intellectual fibre where there is no acquired habit of bodily self-restraint.

Most parents, we suppose, desire the good of their children, but with many, it is sadly noticeable, that there is no longer any attempt made to instruct their children in self-denial and self-restraint.

We raise our voice against this increasing evil, more particularly on behalf of our country. The "coddled" never do much for the State. They and their children become the effeminate and enervated members of society, whose example is so vicious, and who—having no worthy object in life, oftentimes no necessary work to do, no responsible position to fill, and no control over their passions and appetites—grow up to form that class "dangerous and mischievous to the intellectual vigour of society," and more particularly to the "institutions of our country."

Supreme Court.

TUESDAY, JAN. 13, 1880. The Supreme Court met at Charlotetown to-day. There was a full bench of Judges. The following gentlemen compose the Grand Jury.

Henry Beer, foreman; Artemas Lord, Joseph Sturdy, Angus McDonald, William Dodd, Geo. Anderson, John McGregor, Owen Curtis, Benj. Bullman, Geo. Milner, Alex. Scott, Geo. D. Longworth, Henry A. Holl, Wm. Mutch, Duncan McIntyre, John Fremore, Henry Davison, Edward Henry, Thomas McGrath.

The Grand Jury brought in the following bill: The Queen vs. Geo. A. Stanley, stealing from the person. A true bill.

Decisions were given by the Court as follows:—

Sarah Cantello vs. James Beales, question of right of dower, tried last term.—Court ordered judgment to be entered for defendant with costs.

Mary McSwain vs. Wm. Chappell, tried last term.—Court make the rule absolute for a new trial.

John C. Larkin vs. Peter McNutt, tried at St. Eleanor's last time, and plaintiff nonsuited. Chief Justice states that rule should be made absolute for a new trial. Justice Peters and Justice Hensley contra; and the rule discharged for a non suit with costs.

Summerside Bank vs. J. E. Morrisey and another.—Court affirm the verdict and discharge the rule for a new trial with costs.

The profits of the Vanderbilt estate from Wall Street operations the past year are reported at $30,000,000, of J. J. Gould $15,000,000, Russell Sage $10,000,000, Sydney Dillon $10,000,000, Jas. R. Kene, $8,000,000, the first National Bank $2,000,000, Morgan & Co., and three or four other operators, $2,000,000.

ALEXANDER McKENZIE, lately a collector for the Scottish Legal Insurance Society, was sentenced at Aberdeen recently to be imprisoned for twenty days for having by fraud obtained the value of a policy belonging to the heirs of a person deceased.
