Valencia Oranges.
"Few people are probably aware that it takes over 50,000,000 boxes of oranges to supply the annual demand for this fruit in the United States," said a wholesale fruit merchant in New York. "About 90 per cent of the fruit is grown in California and Florida, and the rest comes principally from Valencia. The domestic fruit is now selling at from $2.75 to $4 a box, while the foreign article is worth from $5 to $7 per crate."
"One reason why we import so many Spanish oranges is owing to the large yearly exports of our own luscious product to London, where our fruit finds a ready market and is considered a great luxury. Besides there are many Americans who have cultivated a taste for the fine Valencia fruit, and they will apparently have nothing else. So to please both English and American consumers we export and import large quantities of oranges."
"Valencia exports more oranges than any other city in the world. It largely supplies England, sending there annually some 40,000,000, in boxes holding 500 each. The country in the neighborhood of the city is flat and has something of the aspect of a market garden. All semitropical fruits grow there, and raisin and wine grapes, rice and mulberry trees flourish especially. But the growing of oranges for exportation is the chief industry. So great is the foreign demand for the fruit that when I was in Valencia in the harvest season of 1896 I found it next to impossible to buy a first rate orange, the best being packed for shipment. Those commonly eaten by the inhabitants are the small mandarins. Last year some 400,000 boxes of "Valencias" came to America, and the call for them was brisk. This year at least 450,000 boxes are expected to arrive in New York, and the demand for the fruit in most of the big cities will doubtless be very active during the holidays."—Washington Star.

A High Ball.
The recent coup of the Princess de Sagan in Paris has created much smiling comment. She is a well known leader in the fashionable world and for 22 years she and her husband have lived apart. Recently she succeeded in carrying him off from his club while he was ill and he is now under her roof, and it is announced a reconciliation has taken place. Her eldest son, who always sided with his father, is furious, and his mother will not let him see his father more than once a week, and no one knows whether the old prince is staying at his wife's house or his free will or because he is locked in. An amusing story is told about the conditions under which the prince attended a ball given by his wife to royalty in 1878. It was impossible to entertain royalty without the presence of the master of the house, and the princess sent a friend to intercede with her husband. The prince at the time happened to be a bit short of money and hardly waited for the friend to make explanation before he responded: "Certainly, I'll come with great pleasure—for $20,000." He got the money and was at the ball.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

What the Stars Foretell.
London Answers says: "Zadkiel, whose almanac for 1898 has just been issued, does not prophesy smooth things for the coming year. April, 1898, promises to be a decidedly exciting month. The United States will then enter upon an adventurous foreign policy, apparently directed against Canada. At the end of the month 'an awkward imbroglio' awaits our government, which, however, will extricate itself somehow, only to have to contend against opponents both powerful and persistently hostile."
"In October foreign affairs will again look unpromising. An emute in Egypt or the Sudan is predicted, and yet more fighting on the borders of India. Almost the only pleasant event predicted by Zadkiel is that some useful reforms will be inaugurated in the postoffice."
"The stars are unkind to crowned heads. The king of Sweden is doomed to death, the czar's health will give constant anxiety, and the German emperor will be in danger of yet another accident, the nature of which is not indicated by the stars."

A Great Smoke.
A gentleman well known in turf circles made a curious wager in the year 1860, in which he backed himself to smoke one pound weight of strong foreign regalias within 12 hours. The conditions were that the cigars should be smoked one at a time to within an inch of the end, the baker of time, as in the case of some pigeon matches, finding the weeds.
The match was decided on a Thames steamer plying between London and Chelsea, the smoker taking up a position well forward in the bows, where he caught the force of all the breeze that was blowing. The cigars ran 100 to the pound, so that about eight an hour had to be consumed to win the wager. A start was made at 10 o'clock in the morning, and the affair was finished shortly after 7 in the evening.
In the course of 9 hours and 20 minutes 86 cigars were fairly smoked, the greatest number consumed being in the second hour, when the smoker disposed of no fewer than 16. At the eighty-sixth cigar, when 14 only remained to be smoked, the baker of time gave in, finding that the smoker was certain to win, and the latter puffed the remainder away at his leisure in the course of the same evening.—Strand Magazine.

Sleeplessness.
Sleeplessness brought about by nervous excitement, mental strain or overwork can be cured by a harmless home remedy, which anybody can easily test. Simply take a moist towel, fold it up and place it across the neck. For sleeplessness of nervous people who suffer from cold feet while the head is hot there is no better remedy than to rub the legs, and particularly the feet, briskly with a brush or a rough towel. This will benefit the circulation, and a sort of tired feeling is the result, which soon produces sleep. Drugs cannot be used successfully for either of these forms of sleeplessness, while the local application of water will almost unexceptionally give immediate relief.—Philadelphia Ledger.

London Streets.
If any one were to undertake to walk, one way only, through all the streets of London, he would be obliged to go a distance of 2,600 miles, or as far as it is across the American continent from New York to San Francisco. This will give an idea of the distance one will have to go to see thoroughly even the greater part of the city of London—the largest city in the world.
