Ask Jeweller's Advice When Buying A New Watch

Are you one of the several million Canadians who is a prospective watch buyer this year? If you are, be sure to consult your community heweller.

The watchmakers of Switzerland point out that a fine timepiece is like a fine automobile -- only an expert really can tell its performance possibilities. And the quality jeweller, who has been selling and servicing fine watches for many years, is the only qualified person in your community to rely upon when it comes to the purchase of a watch.

When selecting a watch, personal preference in style, together with pocketbook capabilities, must first be considered. At that point however, your jeweller is in a position to help you to select a fine watch which he knows is built to give you accurate, dependadle service over the coming years.

For example, his experience has given him practical knowledge of the workmanship that has gone into the various brands of watches on the market. And since his store and reputation are the guarantee behind the product he sells, his first desire is to sell watches that will keep his customers staisfied.

There are various grades of watch movements manufactured and offered for public sale; it's the business of your jeweller to know and recognize the difference between them. He might offer you two different watches -- one that sells for $40, the other for $10.. And he'll be the first to tell you there is a difference between he two, although he has made it his business to make certain that the $40 watch he sells is the best value he has been able to find for customers who can afford a watch in that price category.

A number of features in the make - up of a watch can be reflected in its retail selling price. Certain watches have had practically every part in the movements finished by hand and, naturally, this painstaking checking and rechecking must bring the price up. In addition, there are different metals used for different parts of the mechanism and, here again, the cost differential will be reflected in the price you pay.

And, just as there is a difference in movements, there is also a difference in latch cases. It might be chrome, stainless steel, gold plate, gold filled, or 14 - karat gold. And, even if marked gold, it might well be paper - thin, so that it does not give the movement the protection it needs against everyday wear.

Too often a prospective watch buyer will be lulled into the purchase of a so-called watch bargain," only to find later that he usually gets just about what he pays for. An established jeweller generally carries only standard brands of fine watches -- timepieces that give good value for the money you spend.

Remember, a fine watch is only as good as the firm that stands behind it, and your local community jeweller has a reputation for reliability upon which you can depend.
