IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LEAGUE OF THE CROSS PICNIC.

Gaily lie we to the Southport,
On whose decks our loved ones tarrry,
Waiting there with hearts expectant,
Young and old—we all felt merry.

Didn't we, boys ? as our old ship started
In full speed for Red Point Wharf,
Over the rippling waters dancing,
Keeping time to our merry chaff.

Never did the Hillsborough look more lovely,
Banks and fields on either side;
While on her bosom the dear old Southport
With her freight did gaily glide.

Mothers with their little children,
Maidens, sweet young faces, too,
To the sound of sweetest music,
For just one day bade cares adieu.

Such a lovely time it was, boys,
On the way to McEachern's grove;
Three ringing cheers as we think of it now, boys,
All united in strongest love.

Send up your applause for Father Hogan,
And for Mr. McEachern, too;
Three great shouts for the gallant band boys,
So, until next year—adieu, adieu.

CURED TO STAY.

DR. E. A. ROSE DISAPPOINTS THE DOUBTERS—HE ONCE HAD DIABETES BUT HAS IT NO MORE—ATTENDING TO HIS BIG PRACTICE.

Portland, Ont., Aug. 20.—The account which appeared in many Canadian papers a few months ago of Dr. E. A. Rose having been cured of diabetes by Dodd's Kidney Pills, attracted widespread attention at the time. Many doubters, though, protested that the cure was not a permanent one. The best proof that these doubters were wrong is the fact that for a year back Dr. Rose has been attending to his practice, which was always a large one, in this village and the surrounding country, and has never had any return of the disease. His health is first-class and the doctor is not compelled to take any of the precautions as to diet or otherwise, that are always orderse for people threatened or troubles with diabetes.

It was the true Mark Tapley spirit that actuated George Washington Johnson, a colored man, when upon losing one of his nether limbs he cheerfully remarked, "One less blackleg in the family."—Boston Transcript.

Americans in Paris are talking about the latest and most remarkable place of resort on the Boulevard de Clichy, the Cafe de la Mort, where beer is served by waiters dressed as undertakers from coffins, instead of tables, and where everything, including a mortuary transformation scene and dances of skeletons, is suggestive of the grave.

Plain Living and High Thinking.

The two go together. But high living cannot be associated with high thinking. It utterly deranges the system and makes mental labor of any kind an effort. It leads to dyspepsia, which, however, may be completely cured, as it has been in hundreds of cases, by a systematic course of Hawker's nerve and stomach tonic and Hawker's liver pills. They are sold by all druggists.

The laces of the Astor family are valued at $300,000, and those of the Vanderbilts at $500,000. The Pope's lace treasures are said to be worth $75,000, those of the Queen of England $75,000, and those of the Prince of Wales $250,000.

Indisputable.

Why spend $1 for a bottle of medicine for a complaint when one box of Beecham' pills, costing only 25 cents, will cure nearly all known diseases ? This is because constipation is the cause of nearly all ailments and Beecham's pills cure constipation. A valuable book of knowledge mailed free, on request, by B. F. THE WAYS OF JACK TAR.

SUPERSTITIONS OF THOSE WHO GO DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS.

They Had Stranger Forms in Early Days Than Are Now Manifested—Stolen Wood Mortised Into the Keel to Make the Vessel Sail Faster.

Lieut J. D. Jerrold Kelley gives an interesting chapter of "Superstitions of the Sea" in the July number of the Century. After studying them fairly well, he doubts if modern sailors are more superstitious than any other class with equal training and opportunities. I believe that everybody is leavened with superstition, he says, notably the noisiest scoffers, and those mountebanks, the Thirteen Clubs, for these gentry protest too much. It seems to be a human instinct modified by racial inheritances and developments. In the youth of the world its manifestations were the earliest recorded utterances of men concerning the visible phenomena of the universe, and its grip on simple words was an outgrowth of the fear of the unknown. Of all people, sailors must deal at first hand, and helplessly to some degree, with the most unknowable, uncontrollable of material problems, the sea, and it is only natural that their folk-lore should be, in part, land stories fitted with sea meanings, and in part blind explanations of sea phenomena,—both being maintained valorously by the gruesome conservatism of the seaman, even after rational causes come to the rescue.

In earlier days superstition was as much a part of every ship as the water she was to float in; for it entered with the wood scarfed into her keel, and climbed to the flags and garlands waving at her mastheads; it ran riotously at her launching, controlled her name, her crew, and cargoes; it timed her days and hours of sailing, and conveyed her voyages. It summoned apparitions for her ill-fortune, and evoked portents and signs for her prosperity; it made winds blow foul or fair, governed her successful ventures and arrivals, and, when her work was done, promised a port of rest somewhere off the shores of Fiddler's Green, where all good sailors rest eternally, or threatened foul moorings deep in the uncanny locker of Davy Jones of ballad memory.

In many countries stolen wood was mortised into the keel, as it made the ship sail faster at night; though if the first blow struck in fashioning this keel drew fire, the ship was doomed to wreck upon her maiden voyage. Silver (usually a coin) placed in the mainmaststep went for lucky ventures, and misguided indeed was the owner who permitted any of the unlucky timbers to enter into the construction. Something of the ceremonious character given to launchings survives to this day; whereas old ships were decked with flowers and crowns of leaves, flags now flutter; the libation poured on the deck, the purification by the priest, the anointing with egg and sulphur, find their exemplars in the well-aimed and wasted magnums which are shattered on the receding cut water as the craft, released from the ways, slips, well-greased, into the sea; the jar of wine put to his lips by the captain, and then emptied on deck, the cakes and ale set before the crew, the stoup of wine offered to passers-by on the quay, and the refusal of which was an evil omen—all are realized in these sadder instrums by the builder's feast in the mold-loft.

Lawyers, clergymen and women are ever looked at with distavor on sailing-ships as sure to bring ill-luck—lawyers, undoubtedly, from the antipathy of sailors to the class, a dislike so pronounced that "sea-lawyer" is a very bitter term of reproach, and "land-shark" is a synonym. Clergymen—priests and parsons—are unlucky, probably because of their black gowns and their principal duty on shipboard—that of consoling the dying and burying the dead, —though possibly because the devil, the great storm-raiser, is their special enemy, and sends tempests to destroy them. Women—who may reason out their unpopularity?—save that a ship is the last place for them, or perhaps because of the dread of witches; for of all spell workers in human form none is so dreaded as the female brewers of hell-broth. Like the priests of the middle ages, they can raise a prime quality of storm by tossing sand or stones in the air, and, like Congreve's Lapland sorceress, are supposed to live by selling contrary winds and wrecked vessels.

Certain families could never get sea employment under their own surnames, not even such members as were born with cauls, for they were tabooed, barred; and many animals—hares, pigs and black cats for example—could neither be carried nor mentioned on shipboard, save under very stringent conditions. Scarborough wives kept a black cat in the house to assure their husbands' lives at sea; but on voyages every black cat carried a gale in her tail, and if she became unusually frolicsome a storm was sure to follow. Years ago, on board the flagship Franklin, up the Mediterranean, we had a yarn that illustrated a survival of this antipathy to certain forms of animal life. Two old quartermasters were heard during the morning watch exchanging in the cockpit dismal experiences of their dreams the night before. One was particularly harrowing, for the narrator wound up with, "And I say, Bill, I was never so afeared in my life; when I woke up it seemed as true as day, and I was all of a tremble like an asp on a leaf."

"What's that?" said the other. "Pipe down; don't mention that reptile; he's a nosdoo on shipboard."

Figureheads were at first images of gods, and later of saints and sea heroes, and were held in high reverence, and the eyes ring from each bow of a Chinese junk enable the boat to voyage intelligently—or "no have two eyes, how can see? No can see, how can do?" is the shibboleth of their sailors. Ships' bells were blessed, and to-day if a mistake in their striking is made by a stupid messenger boy, they are struck backward to break the spell. In one ship to which I was attached the bell had come down to us from the Ticonderoga, through the Thetis, I think, and was supposed to be under the special control of a lone spirit of mischief. Why the blue spirit should indulge in such vagaries is hidden, but in the middle of deep sea nights, when the mood role in an auspicious quarter, and the wind blew with the force, and from the the direction, necessary for the spell, the blue bell was bound to make a complete circle, and ring out nine bells stridently. Of course, no one ever heard or ought to hear, nine bells at sea, for eight bells are fixed in limit as the decalogue; but this was promised. Whether the conditions failed to co-ordinate, I cannot say, but though the bell was watched by all sorts and conditions of men, the occult ceremony was never performed for our benefit. Is it necessary to add that by report it was a common event in the other ships mentioned?

The proverbial desertion of sinking ships [illegible] upon reason, and undoubtedly occurs, for as rats like to prowl about dry-footed, and will stick to one place so long as food is plenty, it is probable that the ship they leave is so leaky and unseaworthy that their under-deck work is too wet to suit them.
