CRICKET.

The Cabots and a team from H. M. S. Canada argued it out Saturday afternoon; and the home team emerged from the fray holding the long end of the argument. They won the match by 75 runs. Two innings were played, the Cabots being first to bat. The home team were most unfortunate in the first innings, their wickets being mowed down with almost as much despatch as the hay now falling in our farmers' fields. Wilkie and Stevenson were responsible for these speedy falls, each bowler taking four wickets. The total Cabot score in this innings may be said to be altogether due to three of the team. The first wicket fell for 11 runs and at the fall of the fourth the figures had not been increased. The fifth and sixth were down with but eight more added to the score, the telegraph registering 19 runs at the fall of each. The fall of the eighth wicket saw only 3 more runs added, and Cabot stock was at a discount. But Murray was batting away in good form, despite the speedy dissolution of those who partnered him. He survived the five who followed him to bat, and thanks to his good work, when the tenth wicket went down before a shooter from Stevenson, the score had reached the very respectable figure of 42. It was certainly a small score's up which to him hopes, and Caboters felt ominous for their safety. They did not know the snap that was in store for them though.

The Canada's team then took their first grasp of the willow, facing the bowling of McQuillan and Bethune. If Cabot wickets were taken with ceremony, some other word denoting a greater degree of swiftness will have to be employed to tell how Cabot wickets tumbled over. The first four fell for only 5 runs; and with double that number down the score had only been increased by 3 runs. The figure was still 8 when the ninth wicket dropped. Then Stevenson partnered Drury, and between them they rolled up 8 runs more, making the score 16 all when the tenth wicket fell.

In the second innings both teams made up for the poor batting in the first, only the Cabots put on the better stroke. Several of their reliable more than made up for the epherals it was their lot to win in the first venture. Moore, Carvell, Carvell and Bethune whacked the leather in all directions, and played good cricket for their respective scores. The Canada's men battled more freely in their second innings, yet they could take only very few liberties with the Cabot's bowlers. Bethune made a splendid one-man catch of Walter's bat in the Canada's first innings. He had just delivered the ball to that batsman, and was in the act of recovering himself when it came whizzing back into his outstretched hand. He pluckily held on to it, however, and spoiled what, at the least, would have been a four hit. The score was as follows:

SAILORS AT THE PARK.

A detachment of about ninety blue-jackets, under Lieut. Towers, and twenty-five marines with Lieut. Smith, came ashore from the Canada at ten o'clock this morning, and marched to Victoria Park for drill. Our citizens had no notice of this parade, or they would have been out in force to witness the manoeuvres, as a sailors' review is always a drawing event. As it was we noticed Lt.-Col. Moore, D. A. G., and a few militia officers criticising the movements, and a number of sight-seers who were ashore from the Canada at ten o'clock this morning, and marched to Victoria Park for drill. WHY CHEAT YOURSELF?

You may think it pays to cheat other people, but that is not the question. If your neighbor conceals from you to buy goods for him you may deceive him in the quality and pocket the profits, but where is the profit in cheating yourself? If you must pay the doctor who treats another man's eyes, you may get a cheap doctor; but will you hunt up a numbskull to practice on your own eyes? You might get him cheap, but would you save money in the long run? In buying goods for your own use, why should you substitute a poorly-made article? You can cheat yourself most wretchedly in buying cheap FURNITURE. It is a common trick, but the beauty and value of your own property suffer from it.
