THE DAILY EXAMINER.

AUGUST 27, 1894.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

—The Canadian hen will now have a better show by the reduction of the duty on eggs in the new United States tariff from five cents to three cents per dozen. She would have been better pleased, however, if her fruit had been placed on the free list.

—The present session, the second of the fifty-third Congress of the United States, has lasted 345 days, including the extraordinary session, longer than any session of Congress since the twenty-seventh, which sat in 1841-42 for 375 days. The first Congress had a session of 431 days, the longest in the history of the United States.

—If "J. C. M. D.," who writes so entertainingly in the Patriot regarding the operations of the dredge at Dundas, had made enquiries he would have learned that the idleness of which he complains was enforced,—that it was all on account of some damage to the bucket which could not be repaired nearer than Charlottetown!

—An exchange thus tersely sums up the tariff situation: Canadians occupied about two months to revise their tariff. The Americans required over six to revise theirs. In Canada business did not suffer as the people of the country knew the revision would be made in the country's interest. They had confidence from the outstart. In the United States uncertainty as to the tariff changes held industry bound to the ground. By long delay and tariff uncertainty the industrial organization of the American nation has been shaken to its foundation.

—The Commander-in-Chief of the British forces in India, has been investigating the relations between intemperance and crime and disease among the troops, and has obtained some highly suggestive results. It appears that in 1893 there were eight general courts-martial in India for the trial of British soldiers, all of them non-abstainers. Of 1,450 soldiers tried at district courts-martial only 39 were abstainers. The number of abstainers in the army in India has rapidly advanced from 13,487 in 1890 to 22,369. This is a good showing in favor of tetotallers.

—Referring to the capture and punishment of some American fishermen in Canadian waters lately by Canadian fishery officers, the New York Press remarks: "The Canadians are right. If our fishermen enter Canadian waters and violate the laws of that country, they are liable to punishment by the Canadian authorities, and without the interference of the United States either." The Press takes a proper view of the matter. The individuals who undertake to set the law of their own or any other country at defiance should be punished, if discovered, and without interference.

—Montreal Gazette: Mr. Laurier at Brantford asked what is to prevent Canada having reciprocity with the United States, and replied: "One thing only; the Government to-day do not want it. There is no other reason." Yes, there is another reason, and it is the main reason. The men who control the United States' government do not want it. Mr. Laurier forgets, or pretends to forget, that it takes two to make a bargain. If he were in power, he would, no doubt, be able to admit American products free into the Dominion, but there is nothing to show that he could get Canadian products admitted free into the States.

—The Montreal Star has recently been delving into the trade question, and this is what it says: "The Liberals will find it hard to persuade the people that they are injured by having their necessary revenue raised by duties so levied that their presence enables Canadians of enterprise to build up industries at home. If the revenue be not needed, then the case takes on a different aspect; but even the economical Liberal party cannot run the Government wholly without revenue. It then becomes merely a question of how it shall be levied—i. e., whether a man shall have his tea free and pay duty on his clothes, or vice versa. If the tax be put upon his tea, nothing happens save a rise in the price of that popular beverage; whereas, if it be put upon his clothes, a factory for the making of these clothes may be started in his own town, with the effect of increasing population and the value of everything he possesses. To prove that this injures the man in question is, indeed a Herculean task."

—The report of the Irish Land Commission has just been issued. The commission says the evidence before them showed that the Irish rents fixed by the courts between 1881 and 1885 are now materially excessive. The present system, they say, appears to impede seriously the administration of justice to the tenants owing to expense and delays. The courts generally have denied the tenant a share in the value of his improvement although judgment in the famous case of Adams vs. Dunseath declared him entitled to the same. The commission recommend that the occupant be no longer compelled to pay rent on his improvements. It is urged that a commission be appointed at next session of parliament to enquire further into the subject in question. The above matter is covered by a majority report. The minority report admits the desirability of lessening the expenses of litigation and revising rents in Ireland, but contends that in the fixing of judicial rents the act has been construed in the tenant's favor.

—The London Times publishes a long account of the Chinese army. The writer says that the Black flag Army of Li Hung Chang, the force which the great Chinaman has been working at for the last 25 years, and which contains veterans both from Gordon's army and the army it conquered numbers about 50,000 men. The cavalry is armed with Winchesters, the infantry with Remingtons, and the artillery consists of Krupp field-pieces. Besides these there are 30,000 well-disciplined troops in the New Dominion—i. e., in Central Asia. Next comes the old Tartar army, divided into the Banner Army and the Army of Manchuria. Both have some military training. The Banner Army numbers some 300,000 men, of whom 100,000 are in Pekin, and the rest scattered throughout China—180,000 being in Manchuria. Out of the Pekin contingent of the Banner Army, a field force of 20,000 men has been formed on Li Hung Chang's new model. The members of the Army of Manchuria, the second Tartar Army, seem doubtful, but it is believed to be a competent force, and since a division of it is stationed near the Corean frontier it may prove of importance. The net result is that China has about 200,000 men armed with rifles, "all of whom are placed in such a way as to render it easy to employ them in Corea." Given more arms, says the writer, China could double this force.

THE WOOD ISLANDS TRAGEDY

Evidence at the Inquest on Saturday Afternoon.

McNEILL ARRESTED AND LODGED IN JAIL.

He Will Be Arraigned Before Stipendiary Magistrate Palmer on Wednesday.

An inquest was held in view of the body of William J. McMillan, son of James A. McMillan, on Saturday, at the residence of James A. McMillan, Wood Islands, before Coroner James St. C. Moore. The jury was composed of the following persons: Donald R. Martin, foreman; Duncan M. Gillis, Lemuel Compton, John Martin, Francis Panting, Donald D. McMillan, William Young.

William D. Taylor (sworn)—The deceased and I went to James McNeill's house to have some fun. I rapped at the door. He let us in. This was some time after 11 p. m. We spoke to him and treated him with liquor. We then sat and talked upon one thing and another without quarrelling, and then treated him again. Then we began to tease him; he scolded. I then lay on the floor pulling the mattress over me. McNeill, scolding, said "Don't do that again." Deceased went out ahead of me. I pretended not to know where deceased was. McNeill then shut the door on us. Then we went over to the window. I raised it. I dropped two small boards in on the floor so as to make a noise. I pulled at one end of the bedtick to see if he (McNeill) would pull at the other end with me. I then went to see where deceased was. He was at the southwest corner of the house. McNeill was now scolding. Deceased held up a board slantways with one end on the ground. I was at the corner with deceased. We were both making fun of McNeill. We were holding the board to protect ourselves, for McNeill said he would shoot. While I was holding the board up at the request of deceased, deceased passed me and then McNeill fired. Only one shot was fired. McNeill threatened law more than to shoot. McNeill threatened to shoot before we held the board. Once before McNeill fired a shot at a crowd that I was with. He did this on two occasions. I could not say that McNeill fired with intention to kill deceased. McNeill was inside and fired out of the window. Deceased was about six feet from him when he fired. I think McNeill was watching his chance to get a shot. We went away as soon as the shot was fired. We went to Archibald Bell's, about six chains from McNeill's. Deceased walked, but I helped him. Deceased climbed one fence with little help from me. Deceased was crying and complaining of pain. When deceased got opposite the woodpile at Bell's, he said, "Oh let me lay down to die here." Arch. Bell came out. I went for the doctor then. I should think it was about one hour and a half after the firing before the doctor came. I think deceased told me to get the doctor. Deceased took up the board first, I think to defend himself against the shot.

Dr. McLaren (sworn)—I was called to see the deceased on the morning of the 23rd August. It was three o'clock by my watch when I got out of bed. Can't say what time I got to Bell's. I found deceased at Bell's lying on the floor. He was not complaining of pain. He appeared to be quite easy. We turned him over on his back for the purpose of examination. I opened his clothes. I found his underclothing saturated with blood. His abdomen was also covered with blood. He complained of great pain in moving. There were from one to half a dozen different wounds to be seen on the abdomen. I procured some warm water, washed his abdomen and probed the wounds. I found a good deal of hemorrhage from one wound. A probe could be pushed down into the wounds for two or three inches. I placed a pad of gauze over his abdomen, and ordered him to be taken home. After he was brought home I washed the wounds as there was considerable hemorrhge on the way home. I put another gauze pad over his abdomen, and sent for Dr. Barnes. Before he left Bell's I gave him a dose of morphine. While Taylor was away for Dr. Barnes, I kept deceased quiet with morphine. Upon the arrival of Dr. Barnes, we examined the case again. After talking the matter over we decided to adopt the palliative treatment, to keep deceased as quiet as possible after we dressed the wounds. This treatment was continued. I remained with him till he died. After his death I sent for Dr. Barnes to perform a post mortem examination on his body. We opened the abdomen and found a great deal of dark colored fluid in the cavity, and from half a dozen to a dozen different wounds in the small bowel. In the last wound we found a small metal nail. Before we entered the peritoneal cavity we found a metal nail between the layers of the muscles; also found, upon opening the peritoneal cavity, evidence of intense peritonitis. Death was caused by peritonitis, resulting from the wounds produced by the nails.

Dr. Barnes (sworn).—I was called on the morning of the 23rd August in consultation with Dr. McLaren in the case of William J. McMillan. Found several lacerated wounds of the abdomen. The patient was very weak, and the symptoms indicated peritonitis, due probably to perforation of the intestines. The wounds were probed while the patient was under ether. In consideration of his weak condition and his many wounds, Dr. McLaren and I considered it unadvisable to operate. We adopted the palliative form of treatment: and warned his friends of a probable fatal result. The wounds were antiseptically dressed. On the 24th, with Dr. McLaren I performed a post mortem examination an I found that death resulted from peritonitis due to several perforating wounds of the small bowel. Found a small nail in one of the wounds. Any one of the wounds was sufficient to cause death. Another nail, than the one mentioned, was found outside the peritontoneal cavity in the layers of the muscles. These wounds were badly lacerated and were with great difficulty probed. The hemorrhage from them was severe. I consider it remarkable he did not die immediately on receiving the wounds.

The jury returned a verdict that the deceased came to his death by a shot from a gun fired by James McNeill.

After the inquest McNeill was taken in charge by two constables and removed to Eldon, where he was arraigned before H. James Palmer, Stipendiary Magistrate for Queen's County, and remanded for trial at Charlottetown on Wednesday.

At Eldon, McNeill was handed over to Constable Campbell, of this city, who removed him to Charlottetown and placed him in jail, where he now lies. Campbell arrived at Southport with his prisoner shortly after midnight on Saturday, and being unable to cross the ferry remained at that place all night, crossing yesterday morning in the quarter past seven boat.

McNeill is arrested on a charge of murder. To use the language of the warrant of arrest, it is charged that he did "wilfully and maliciously discharge a loaded gun at William J. McMillan, with intent to kill and did kill the said William J. McMillan."

McNeill is a farmer and resides at Wood Islands with an invalid spinster sister He is seventy-four years of age, and is spoken of as a "well preserved old man."

A representative of THE EXAMINER called at the jail to-day for the purpose of interviewing the prisoner, McNeill, but was politely told by Mr. Harvie, one of the keepers, that no person was allowed to see him.

Mr. A. A. McLean, Q. C., has been retained to defend McNeill.

A SCIENTIFIC SENSATION.

A late London despatch says: The scientific sensation of the year is the announcement made to the British Association at Oxford last week that a new gas has been discovered in the atmosphere. The great assembly of the world's savants has felt as near an approach to excitement over the astonishing news as men of science ever allow themselves to reach. Lord Rayleigh and Prof. Ramsay are the honored discoverers of what they believe is the new element in chemistry. The qualities of his strange substance are peculiar. Although it is said to form, chemically, the proportion of one per cent. of common air, nobody suspected its existence until about three weeks ago. The experimenters found that nitrogen obtained from air has a different density from that of the same gas obtained from other sources. Then they treated what they supposed was pure nitrogen from the atmosphere with magnesium. The nitrogen was absorbed, but the residue remained. This mysterious remainder was tested, and proved to be a dense and remarkably inert gas twenty-one times heavier than hydrogen and fifty per cent. heavier than nitrogen. The spectrum was new, showing a single blue line much more intense than the corresponding line in the nitrogen spectrum. The discover kept the result of the investigation secret in order to fulfil the conditions of the prize offered through the Smithsonian Institute for the most important scientific discovery. They have succeeded thus far in accumulating only a quarter of a point of the new gas.

Prof. Dewar, the great expert in all atmospheric affairs, is plainly skeptical about the identity of the new gas. He has found when liquefying air, that the product is always clouded by a white deposit, which he supposed was solid carbonic acid and other impurities. It may be, he says, that this is the sold form of the new gas, but it forms far less than one per cent. The substance must have exactly the same boiling point as either oxygen or nitrogen. Otherwise he would have been sure to detect it in his experiments in solidifying air.

The general belief is, however, that the new gas is really new, or an allotropic form of nitrogen, which does not exist in appreciable quantities in ordinary atmospheres, but which was produced by the discoverer's experiments, just as ozone is produced by the action of electricity on oxygen.

Other bits of news of popular interest in the various departments of the scientific world have been announced at the meetings of the Associations. It has long been known that the earth's axis varies in an irregular way as regards its relation to fixed objects in space; but Prof. Forster announces, as the result of careful observations by agents of the International Geodetic Union, that the earth's axis is a bit loose, as regards the globe itself. The effect is that the North Pole wobbles slightly. The variation in position is not over fifty feet, however, so there is no danger that any explorers who have gone to the arctic regions without Prof Forster's warning will get hurt by going too near.

Several strange discoveries regarding prehistoric man was announced. The remains recently found in Switzerland show the existence, in the neolithic age, of a race of pigmies in Europe. Herr Mascha has unearthed, within a few days in Moravia, many remains of mammoths, and with them the skeletons of a whole human family almost gigantic in size. The discovery seems to settle the disputed point whether man was co-existent with the mammoth.

HE WANTED DAMAGES.

Russian, Hebrew and modern American customs were strangely mingled in a suit that came before Chief Justice Ehrlich, of the City Court, New York, one day last week. The plaintiff was Samuel Philip Grinnfarb, and his action was to compel Solomon Hausen to pay him $750 damages because Hausen's pretty daughter, Esther Rachel, would not marry him. The parents of Grinnfarb and of Esther were friends and neighbors in Russia for many years. When the young people grew up they began to talk of marriage, and the old folks willingly gave their consent. A marriage contract in the Hebrew language was accordingly drawn up in 1891 by the fathers of the prospective bride and bridegroom, and the children also added their signatures. For some reason the wedding did not take place in Russia, and the Hausens came to New York. Grinnfarb soon followed and pressed Esther to marry him. She refused and her father, who is a well-to-do jeweller, declined to force her into the marriage. Grinnfarb, seeing his prospective wife and her dowry slipping away from him, brought an action directly in court through Z. Kurzman, a lawyer, to recover damages from Esther's father. He puts the mariage contract in evidence, says he is willing to carry it out; and declares that in his efforts to do so he left Russia and lost business valued at $3,000 a year.

NOT BECAUSE WE KNOW THEY ARE GOOD,

But because we believe they are the best in the market, is why we recommend PRIESTLY'S CRAVENETTES. We have them in Black, Navy, Tan Brown and Fawn, 60 inches wide, waterproof and great wearers.
