ELLEN'S DIARY

Grandchild Gives Evidence Of Interest In Farm Work

"Aren't we having a nice time?" Peter, the three-past lad, queried a bit breathlessly, turning the handfeed at the door, with which we had been bringing a supply of sticks from the woodshed to the box in the porch.

"And isn't this the loveliest afternoon!" we said.

He has been left behind by his parents and brothers after dinner, when they set out for town. There are the occasions when he would prefer to be one of the company excursioning, but this time he was smiling happily when he came by, to be our guest. This pleased us. Though we may sometimes question the disappointment of such a one with a casual, "Oh, he is too young to know, or to remember" we have seen an extremely forlorn look, which denied this, in young eyes.

"I'll play a while with the toys" he said, shedding coat and cap. "And I'll look at TV... and..."

"We'll go outdoors and get the wood in bye and bye" we said.

He is a knowing little fellow, mostly agreeable to reasoning, yet with a decided will of his own... but as one of kin reminded us not long ago with a teasing chuckle, "Let's not get into this grandchildren "business"— we have more important things to talk over!"

He, however, righted the sled, then stood a moment taking stock of the surroundings, glimpsing James across the yard at the choring.

"You'll have to bring the rest of the wood yourself" he said, stepping away smartly. "I have to go now to help Gran'daddy get those mangels fed to the sows."

"There, Ellen" James offered coming to meet him, "he's going to make the right farmer, isn't he? See where his interest lies! He's, as I say" he smiled down at him, "the best boy..."

"...in the whole world!" Peter nodded shyly.

"Come and see if you think our 4-H calves are improving. Sometimes I think they are, and then again there are days when I fancy they're not gaining as they should" Mack said this evening.

Mild and pleasant it was, bright, though the moon remained lightly clouded.

"Now this is mine" he indicated when we presently came to a stable," and that's hers."

We chuckled "You sound like an old chap, we used to know" we said. He always referred to his wife as 'her' or 'she', never as 'Mrs..' as was the custom then, or by name. Indeed, we children never knew the poor old lady had a christian name until she died. And then only for hearing our elders reckoning that 'there were just the three girls in that family' and identifying each one by name!"

"Well" he grinned, "girls are 'hers', aren't they?"

"Even sisters" we said.

"The month, Ellen' James says, looking at the calendar's first leaf, "hasn't much left of it now."

Nor the day! And so nice a one it was, all in all.

Until tomorrow — Diary Good-night....

Mixed Grill Is Tops Even If It's Broiled

What is the difference between "grilling" and "broiling?"

This question often pops up from someone in the audience during the question - and - answer period the Chef and I always include when we make appearances at women's clubs or women's associations.

"Grilling" is originally a British word applied to cooking meats, poultry or fish on a grill either over or standing on edge next to glowing coals. From Now Above

With the coming of gas and electricity as cooking fuels, grilling was conducted in a similar fashion, but the heat was applied from above.

The word "broiler" is an American origination, coming from the popular method of cooking "broiler" chicken. In the long run, "grill" and "broil" have come to mean the same thing, so they can be used interchangeably.

However, in the United States broiling now includes a method of cooking not only meats, poultry and fish, but many vegetables; several fruits; cereals including sliced hominy polenta (cornmeal mush); also open sandwiches topped with cheese, Hollandaise sauce or even seasoned sour cream!

In today's menu we suggest a mixed sausage grill.

Note: Addition of egg holds rice kernels together and keeps ring from breaking when unmolded.

Fill ring with cooked (frozen or canned) asparagus cut in 1 inch lengths, and cooked, sliced carrots, mixed with Bechamel or cream sauce. Garnish: chopped hard-cooked egg and parsley.

THE CHEF USES BUDGET-WISE EGGS

Mesdames: Five eggs a week per person is the minimum allowance for good health according to standards set by the U.S. Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics.

Why are eggs really essential to good health? A look inside the shell gives the answer.

There we find a high proportion of protein in the white; fat in solution in the yolk; an impressive group of seven minerals headed by phosphorus and iron; a high content of essential vitamins A and D, with smaller amounts of thiamin, riboflavin and pantothenic acid, and others in the B complex family.

The elements introduced in daily menus for the family are just as important to human beings as they are to the formation of a perfect living chick.

Yes, eggs have a Number 1 priority or regular use in our meals.

Buy the best quality eggs for boiling, poaching and preparing foods when the whites must be separated from the yolks. Buy grade B or C eggs for frying, omelets, shirring, scrambling and cookery when the yolks are not to be separated from the whites.

MARY HAWORTH

Youthful Mob Violence Is World Wide Problem

Dear Mary Haworth: Some of your writings suggest that you confuse selfishness and arrogance in American youth with American freedom of life.

I only wish you would visit Europe and see for yourself the contrast between Europe's closely knit families—how they live with love and devotion—and the modern American pattern of conflict, impatience, discourtesy and even rejection that exists between parents and children.

It is my impression that you know very little about the traditional character and substance of European family life. This seemed apparent in your recent contribution to an exchange, contrasting the American way with the European way, as regards the older women's status in the family hierarchy after her son marries.

In Europe there is no need for the wife to kowtow to the older woman; or, rather, no sense that due respect for the older woman's seniority amounts to kowtowing. In Europe, the upbringing of children is different. They are taught from the first to respect their elders, with love.

I am European, living abroad for 15 years and in this time have had opportunity to observe American mores. American children seem to have no respect, no guidance. Therefore it becomes necessary for the police to handle youth as a mob of hoodlums—for example, on Labor Day weekends—and enforce curfew laws to drive them home.

So, before you exult in the American way, get wider experience of the world. Sincerely, O.C.

Dear O.C.: True love of country is closely akin to true love of family in the sense that one (in his right mind) doesn't have to believe that either is blameless, to merit one's steady allegiance. With Patrick Henry I take my stand: "My country! Right or wrong!"

Or who was that other patriot who mused: "Lives there a man with soul so dead that never to himself hath said: 'This is my own, my native land...'"

Well, anyway, I couldn't be sorrier about the offense to good manners and common decency given by insubordinate American youth, running in cliques and gangs, in many American communities.

But let's be fair. Youthful mob violence in our times is by no means an exclusively American phenomenon. Rather it is a sort of prairie fire that encircles the globe.

Where did the 20th century insurrection of youth begin? When did family authority begin to come apart at the seams?

I was a reporter in the 1930s when a new hilmanist, Harriet Stanton Blatch, then in her 80s (daughter of the famous Elizabeth Cady Stanton) returned from Europe.

Prophetically she shook her head at the disturbing spectacle she had witnessed on the continent, of marching, jubilating organized mobs of youth in Germany and Italy, proposing to take the world by storm under the banner of Hitler and Mussolini.

In that period, European youth was being drilled to obey the mob leader and betray the family, if the parents' teachings were opposed to the rule of the mob. History records that the youthful mob overran the European home disastrously for quite a few years.

Mrs. Blatch had foresight. She said in part, "This is a tragic, foolish, frightful phenomenon for which the world will pay dearly. Youth is incapable of governing wisely. From 30 to 60 are the great years of life—".

In my view, America's way of life, overall, differs from the European way in that it represents a halfway house, in mankind's moral migration from the authoritarian past (for which the older societies stand) towards the dawn of responsible enlightened personal freedom.

We've got a long way to go, to reach that dawn; but we're on our way, and by us I mean the human race.
