WORLD'S DEEPEST NEED

"Does your watch keep good time?" One friend asked another. The answer: "No. My disposition is such that I can never have a watch that keeps good time."

His watch was one of the best—a beauty to look at and better inside than outside, but its owner never gave it a chance. At the other extreme, here was a man who was a perfect crank about accurate time-keeping. He too had a good watch and pestered the jeweler about regulating it until it kept time to the second week after week. A good watch will give you what you demand of it; it cannot give you more.

Life's like that. You get what you demand from yourself, and often you get what you demand from others whether you deserve it or not. A country lad in the long ago had dreams that soared above his circumstances. He had gifts to back his dreams, although at the time he did not know it. He used to listen to the whistle of the trains in the distance, and wonder about the great cities to which they were going, and about life and achievement in them. In due time he sought and got employment with that railway, and his character and energy soon made themselves felt in its service so that his promotion was rapid. A few years later he re-visited the old home, and a conversation like this took place. "I suppose they are paying you well, John?" "Yes, father, very well." "A dollar a day?" "Yes, father, more than that." "Two dollars?" "Yes, father, much more than that."

"You don't say. Five?" "Yes, father, more than twenty-five." "John," the old man exclaimed, "are you worth it?" It is a pointed question which every successful man must answer sooner or later. Are you worth your wage? Are you giving as much as you are getting? Is your contribution to your community equal in value to what that community enables you to gain for yourself? But, first, there is the cultivation of your gifts in order that you may attain and achieve what you desire. To look at the picture of a graduating class ten years later makes one catch his breath. So often the winner of the medal and scholarship is no longer in the first place; people whose names were unnoticed when the results of the examination were read are in leading positions in the work of the world. Character counts in the long run more than genius. The two-talent man with high aims and resolute will goes far ahead of the brilliant man who is unwilling to spend and is spent in service. This has happened in our own city in the field of statesmanship and the field of scholarship. Yet when genius is backed by character, the world is at his feet. The need of the hour? It is of men who will apply this principle to the nation. It is always a minority who decides a nation's character and course of action. The vast majority don't care; that is, they don't think things through; they will follow those who see clearly, believe firmly, and put their lives behind their ideas.
