by Hayden Parkman CHAPTER IX Continued

He appeared to be sensible enough in other respects, and reacted well to such simple mental tests as the doctor contrived to introduce in the course of conversation; but his nervous, guarded manner and this curious reticence all pointed to an abnormal condition of mind which the doctor found it impossible to account for.

And then, on the second morning he made a discovery. He had subjected his patient to a thorough physical examination, and at its conclusion he surveyed him with a satisfied smile.

"Well, Mr. Thurlow, I am happy to say that you have now reached the convalescent stage," he announced cheerfully. "It is only a question of fresh air and good food, and you will soon be as fit as ever you were. I would like to be able to take the credit to myself for you; really remarkable recovery, but the truth is that it is chiefly due to your own magnificent constitution. I would say that you have lived an exceptionally healthy life — an open-air life. You have been a sailor, perhaps?"

At this direct question, the man blinked at him uneasily, and then lowered his gaze to the blanket which covered his thin body.

"Come! Am I right?" Durand persisted generally, determined to push the attack home this time. The man glanced up at him fleetingly and then looked down again.

"I — yes, I think so," he mumbled haltingly. The doctor eyed him curiously. "You think so?" he repeated with a little laugh. "But surely you know, Mr. Thurlow?"

was the winner of the 4-lb. carton of Fancy Assorted Biscuits in our weekly drawing, April 11th.

MRS. STEWART will also be eligible in our monthly drawing for the choice of prizes.

This time the man remained with his eyes cast down for some seconds. Then: "No," he muttered shamefacedly. "I don't know. I — I can't remember."

The doctor started involuntarily, but when he spoke his voice held no trace of the perturbation he felt.

"Ah, but that is not surprising," he said, with a professional assumption of ease. "You are just recovering from the effects of a very severe ordeal and it is only natural that your memory should be temporarily affected. One cannot expect complete normality at once. It is nothing to worry about; however, it will come back as you grow stronger."

Nevertheless, it had come as a decided shock to him and as he made his way up on deck again, he was in a very perplexed state of mind. The discovery that his patient was suffering from general loss of memory explained all that had been puzzling him — it accounted at once for the acute nervousness and the seeming reticence — but at the same time he found himself unable to understand why he had failed to recognize his condition from the beginning.

It should not have been difficult and yet... He went back over his previous contacts with the castaway and frowned thoughtfully. No, now that he came to think of it, there had been no real evidence at all, such as he had encountered in other cases which had come under his notice. There had been a complete lack of that mental helplessness which had characterized such cases and this fact had deceived him into ascribing the abnormalities he had observed to a different and unknown cause.

Probably it was due to an exceptionally strong will, which had at first refused to admit the disability even to itself; and this was borne out by the almost ashamed manner in which the man had finally confessed of his past. It was one of those freak cases which are the bane of every specialist.

RHEUMATIC PAIN Can Be Costly!

"This winter I had to quit work because of rheumatic pain," writes Mr. T. Glodziecki, Winsor, Ont. "I became fearful of being laid up as on a previous occasion with rheumatic pain. My pain became increasingly severe and spread from hip to ankle. Out of bed, the leg felt cold as though in cold water, so I stayed in bed. A friend persuaded me to take T-R-C's and I'm glad I did. In a short while I was relieved of my pain and was soon on the job again."

compassion so that others might survive."

I am quoting from a late Public Affairs Pamphlet, No. 187, "It's Your Hospital" and "Your Life," written by Lucy Freeman, a New York Times reporter, specializing in news of welfare, psychiatry, and social work. She points out that a city hospital is like Main Street, with all "needed" stores for care and comfort of patients and essential departments — operating rooms, research laboratories, the diagnostic facilities (means of learning what is wrong with the patient). The hospital has developed to provide the patient the best and most complete care possible. "The main service of a hospital is medical and nursing care and it must be good. Competent diagnosis, reliable treatment, and the care of the patient as a whole make up the service."

Hospitals are People. "The vast hospital buildings do not mean much without the people who stand behind them ready to serve all in need. The doctor, nurse, technician, social workers, secretary, within hospital walls make up a team."

Whereas the average industry has between sixty and seventy types of jobs, the average hospital has 185 classifications in 26 different departments. Most hospital work requires special training.

Many of us think that the Government pays the bill but investment in voluntary hospitals is three times as much as in government hospitals and operating costs are three times as much.

A patient may think that when he pays his hospital bill the hospital is earning a profit. Actually it costs much more, the balance being made up by gifts, endowments and special fund-raising. The cost per day in 1888 was $1.39 today it averages $16.77. The hospital, in addition to caring for the sick has three other jobs — education of professional personnel, research, and prevention of illness.

"We are discovering, as a nation, that the right to health belongs to everyone, but with that right goes the obligation to support the facilities that make the right possible." Public Affairs Pamphlet, 24 East 38th St., New York 16, N. Y., cost 25 cents each. It is a non-profit organization.
