"Thief, thief, thief!" "Hush your noise," growled Bob. "I'm not stealing anything. I'm not bothering anybody. I'm not going up to that old nest for a nap, so supposing you just go on about your own business."

"You're making a mistake!" cried Sammy.

"What kind of a mistake?" Bob.

"If you keep on, you'll find out and you'll be sorry," retorted Sammy.

"Sorry for what?" asked Bobby.

"Sorry for the mistake you've made," retorted Sammy. Then he took to his wings and disappeared.

"Now what did that rascal mean?" muttered Bobby. "What kind of a mistake does he think I'm making?"

Still wondering what Sammy Jay meant, Bobby turned and continued his climb up toward that big nest. Sammy Jay was right about his making a mistake, but Bobby had yet to find this out. He would find it out very shortly.

Strange But True
By F. H. MacArthur

About half a century ago, William K. D'Arcy, a rich Englishman, dreamed there was oil in the sandy barren hills of Iran. He spent a fortune proving it. Made a larger fortune for himself and as everybody knows this Eldorado of the Near East is one of the richest oil producing areas in the world.

80,000 persons attend the movies in the United States each week. We do not have the statistics for Canada, but assume a like ratio would hold true.

62 percent of Canadian and American youth between the ages of 16 and 24 drink booze.

J. Edgar Hoover said: "In the last year seventeen percent more boys under 21 were arrested for assault than the previous year, 26 percent more for drunkenness — for girls, the figures are even more startling: 39 percent more for drunkenness, 64 percent for prostitution 124 percent more for vagrancy."

He further states that "the vast army of criminals is ten times greater in number than the number of students in our colleges and universities — for every school teacher in America there are more than 7 criminals."

Along the great barrier reef of Australia may be found a cylindrical worm-like creature known as the sea-cucumber. These curious creatures are impaled on long pointed sticks by the natives, and realize as much as $900 a ton.

One species of jelly fish, our common Hydra, are amazing creatures in that their young are sometimes produced from eggs, but often by means of ends, which grow out of the parents' body. If you should place a medium sized jelly fish on a piece of blotting paper, it will evaporate, and leave scarcely more than its outline on the paper.

There are several thousands of species of sponges ranging in size from a pin's head to a hundred pounds. Some are leathery and some are stony, and some may be mistaken for spunglass. They are of infinite shapes cups, vases, tubes, and spheres being the most common. The best sponges come from the Eastern Mediterranean and the West Indies.

The early American Indians did not call their domestic animals by names such as horse, cow, dog, etc. Prior to the advent of the white man they possessed dogs, distinct from the wolf but different from any breed existing today. Capt. Leigh of the "Hopewell" describes them thus: "dogges of color black not so big as a greyhound."

The Captain's report is dated 1697 and is one of the earliest known references to Indian dogs. Waterproof bottles, shoes and capes were made from the lac of the rubber tree of the West Indies by the natives centuries before the possibilities of the new material were known to whites.

The English chemist Joseph Priestley, discovered the possibilities of the gum when he found it would rub out pencil marks. It was long called "Indian Rubber" because its first source was the West Indies.

One of the Englishmen whose attention was drawn to the strange substance was Thomas Hancock, a coachbuilder of London. The date was 1819. He experimented with the stuff to protect his coaches from the rain. He made the mistake of mixing turpentine with the rubber gum, so his venture proved a failure.

Then he made garters, braces and other small articles out from strips of rubber and these "caught on."

This was the first step forward in the technique of handling raw rubber. In later experiments he found that naphtha was a good solvent for rubber. From this humble beginning arose an entirely new works making rubberized fabric in Cambridge Street, Manchester, and this
