THOU ART NOT HERE.

BY MRS. M. D. WILLIAMS.

Thou art not here, my earliest friend,
Thy counsel and thy aid to lend;
And when the storm-cloud hovers o'er
My darksome path, thy voice no more
Can waken hope, or banish fear;
Guide of my youth, thou art not here.

No more I see thy look of love,
Pure as the smiling stars above,
That look which nerved my heart to bear
When on the verge of dark despair;
But now, where'er my soul is sad,
Thou art not here to make it glad.

Spring cometh, and its skies are clear,—
But thou my mother, art not here;
Thou who didst train the creeping vine
Beneath my window how to twine,
Thou who didst rear the blossoms gay,
Henceforth forever art away.

Thou art not here amid' the flowers;
I see thee not in twilight bowers,
And yet I sometimes think I feel
Thy spirit's presence o'er me steal,
Pure as the breath of evening air
To calm my throbbing brow of care.

WORN OUT LANDS.

Col. Taylor, in Virginia, having a large tract of land impoverished by long cultivation, succeeded in his attempt to restore its ancient fertility without bringing any manure from elsewhere. For this purpose he ploughed the poor cassada, throwing it into high and strong narrow ridges, with the intention of doubling the depth of the surface soil. Upon this he planted Indian Corn followed the next year with Wheat and Clover seed manured with a little Gypsum. The Clover was neither mowed nor fed off, no cattle being admitted; the first years crop rotting on the ground, and that of the second year after ripening seed, and turning dry was ploughed in; the Corn was then planted, followed as before with Wheat and Clover—the soil in the meantime improving, and as the crops increased, he increased his stock of cattle, thus procuring a quantity of stable manure to add to that formed by the Clover. Thus he had one year a crop of twenty five bushels of Corn to the acre on a field of eighty acres, which had produced but two thirds that quantity the preceding rotation, and a crop of fifty bushels to the acre on another field of two hundred acres which produced but twenty five bushels the preceding rotation, but this field had some dung spread over it, as well as a clover crop ploughed in.

We have in the Provinces much exhausted land which might be improved in a similar manner, manuring potatoes for Indian Corn, wood ashes for Gypsum for ashes are here as favourable to the growth of Clover, as Gypsum is in Virginia. Buckwheat has been much used as a manure by ploughing it in when in blossom. On most soils a grassfield laid down in good order will give a crop of hay for a number of years, if only once mowed, and not pastured. Close feeding of aftergrass always greatly diminishes the following crop. When land is naked it is always losing, but when thickly covered with herbage it is gaining. Poor slate gravel when pastured for fifty or sixty years with sheep, will be covered with the poverty grass (Aveua spicata, or animated Oat,) and strawberry disappear, and it is overrun with trailing Juniper, but under the close shelter of the Juniper the soil improves, and after the lapse of a few years becomes capable of supporting a growth of firs, which will finally make the land as good as it was when first cleared, for the roots of trees striking deeper than those of grasses, bring up a portion of fertilising matter carried down by rains, while the leaves and dead twigs falling on the ground serve to form a layer of mould or turf on the suface, which being a bad conductor of heat prevents the ground from freezing only early, and from being affected by the thaws in winter. We might take a useful hint from this provision of nature for the security of roots. There are many bleak hills on which clover and Timothy are often winter killed; were the grass top dressed with compost containing a large proportion of swamp soil or rotten sods, and the after grass left unpastured, this mischance would seldom happen.

QUAKER TOAST.—This from me and mine to thee and thine.—I wish when thou and thine come to see me and mine, that me and mine will serve thee and thine as kindly as thou and thine have treated me and mine," This is a new version of the old compliment, which runs somewhat after this wise:—"I wish thee and thy folks loved me and my folks as well as me and my folks love thee and thy folks. For, sure, there never were folks since folks was folks, that ever loved folks half so well as me and my folks love thee and thy folks."

CURIOSITIES.—The chair on which the sun sets. A garment for the naked eye. The hammer which broke up the meeting. Buckle to fasten a laughing stock. The animal that drew the inference. Eggs from a nest of thieves. A bucket of water from "All's Well."

FACTS AND PUNS.—"We have ever found," says a correspondent, "by conversing with them, that blockheads are more or less given to iron-y, and somewhat addicted to vice. Carpenters, for the most part, speak planely, but they will chisel when they get a chance. Not unfrequently they are bores, and often annoy one with their old saws."

HINT TO PUBLIC AND OTHER SPEAKERS.—Always endeavour to make your speeches sound, sensible, suitable, and short.

One of the latest fashions for gentlemen, is the "barber pole" pattern for trousers; the stripes ascend spirally round the leg, giving the wearer the appearance of a double-barrelled corkscrew.
