PARENTS RESPONSIBLE FOR CHILDREN'S DEATH.

A physician once told the writer that nine-tenths of the children who died before they were 3 years old succumbed to some form of brain trouble, adding furthermore that the parents in almost every case were directly responsible for their early demise. This very severe and likewise very broad statement caused us to ask a number of questions, for certainly this sort of wholesale baby slaughter should be stopped if opening the parents' eyes to their mistakes could do it. The days of Herod have passed into history, yet according to this physician, the innocents are being dispatched in quite as great numbers as ever marked the reign of that blood-thirsty monarch.

No knife or lash helps to hurry the little one out of existence, but only a foolish pride in its growing intellect. Many a tiny mortal before it is two years old is taught to dance, to show how the "mooley cow moos" and the "bow-wow barks." It can mew like tabby and give imitations of different members of the family becoming wrought up and excited over the applause these exhibitions receive, until at night the little hands are hot and dry and the little head feverish and restless.

Of course it is very delightful for the proud parents to be told that their child is a marvel of precocity. It pleases them to note the admiration these small accomplishments call forth, but they do not stop to consider that the effort necessary on the little one's part is as trying to the budding brain as the hardest sort of more advanced mental labor would be for them.

This physician, wise man that he is, says it is quite enough for a child to cut its teeth up to the time it is 2 years old without having thrust upon it the extra burden of brain exercise that the thoughtless parents crowd upon it. Remember this when next you feel inclined to teach some wee atom of humanity a cunning saying or action and bide your time until such education may be entered upon with safety.

The wool crop of two years, or the greater portion of it, is said to be still in Canada. As soon as the new American tariff comes into force this wool will be marketed in the States. A firm in Hamilton is reported to have one million pounds waiting shipment, and the profit will be considerable. In other ways the effect of the changes will be felt. Many lumbermen will cut their logs on this side and ship the lumber to the States, and thus save the expense of towing the logs long distances. Salt, too, will be made free, which accounts for the fact that Detroit capitalists have purchased the Rightmyer salt works at Kincardine and will operate them in future.

CURED TO STAY.

DR. E. A. ROSE DISAPPOINTS THE DOUBTERS—HE ONCE HAD DIABETES BUT HAS IT NO MORE—ATTENDING TO HIS BIG PRACTICE.

Portland, Ont., Aug. 20.—The account which appeared in many Canadian papers a few months ago of Dr. E. A. Rose having been cured of diabetes by Dodd's Kidney Pills, attracted widespread attention at the time. Many doubters, though, protested that the cure was not a permanent one. The best proof that these doubters were wrong is the fact that for a year back Dr. Rose has been attending to his practice, which was always a large one, in this village and the surrounding country, and has never had any return of the disease. His health is first-class and the doctor is not compelled to take any of the precautions as to diet or otherwise, that are always orderse for people threatened or troubles with diabetes.

Indisputable.

Why spend $1 for a bottle of medicine for a complaint when one box of Beecham's pills, costing only 25 cents, will cure nearly any known diseases? This is because constipation is the cause of nearly all ailments and Beecham's pills cure constipation. A valuable book of knowledge mailed free, on request, by B. F. THE NEZ PERCE HORSE.

TWO STORIES THAT ILLUSTRATE HIS INDOMITABLE COURAGE.

How He Detected Robbers and How He Baffled Them Tho' He Died—A Brave Boy, A Noble Horse and His 5,000 Followers.

The hardy little Nez Perce horse, sometimes pied or "calico" in color, sometimes blue and sometimes black as coal, and always beautiful, is quite well known in a way; but few people, I fancy, know what remarkable courage and sagacity he has.

In 1862 and 1863 I was engaged in carrying gold-dust out of the Idaho mountains. One day when descending a steep trail on a densely-wooded mountain side, I found the trail blocked by a tree that seemed to have been suddenly blown down by the wind and a newly-opened trail leading off to the left. My Nez Perce pony stopped, threw back his ears and almost sat down on his haunches as I mercilessly drove my spurs into his flanks. We were often cruel in those hard, swift rides, for time was precious and peril waited on every moment spent between stations. We always dashed on at a hard gallop, the load of gold-dust in the "cateenas" hanging down on either side of the saddle-bow, the reins in the right hand and a cocked pistol in the left.

I spurred until the great Spanish spurs were streaming with blood from the pony's flanks, but still he would not budge an inch in the newly-cleared trail. At last gathering up all his strength, he poised in the air and then plunged headlong on down the hill over the fallen tree. In the leap my pistol was shaken from my hand, and while I was drawing another from my "cateenas" there came a raid of lead from a company of robbers lying in ambush. But the poor pony kept me in my seat, faced about for a second, as if to give me a chance to defend myself, and then plunged on down the mountain two miles to the ferry. There, on the edge of the river, he fell dead from a bullet-wound that must have meant death from the first, for his nostrils were streaming with blood all the way down the mountain.

When the Indian war swept the Nez Perce country the Indians gathered about 5,000 horses into a valley that fronted on the steep bluffs of the Columbia River; and there, with the great white mountains at their back, prepared to make their last desperate stand. In the battle that followed they were defeated and the small fraction of them that remained unkilled put to flight. The horses, shut in by the steep mountains on one side and the steep river bluffs on the other, had to be left behind.

When the battle had closed the soldiers or the volunteers (for only a part were regulars) made a rush for the horses. But they could not lay hands on one of them or approach them. Their splendid heads, with great manes, tossed and tumbled, were in the air, and they went round and round in a circle in the pretty, pent-in little valley, and along the edge of the sheer bluff of the river.

And now for the first time it was noticed that they were under a boy herder. The boy was unarmed, entirely naked and as red as copper. He rode a black stallion with a neck like a bull's and literally mantled and clothed with mane. The boy had no bridle, but wove his hands into the mane, and thus guided the horse at will, at the head of the herd. Sometimes he laid his face down on the proud neck and buried it in the mass of hair, which matched his own in its glossy blackness. Hundreds of men tried to stop or stay the herd in its wild flight, but tried in vain. The green grass disappeared beneath the strokes of spurning feet and dust began to rise in clouds.

The volunteers dropped on their knees here and there around the edge of the circle and began to fire at the boy. They were deadly marksmen and they had no care to spare either horse or rider. But the boy did not seem to want to be spared any more than did the horse. At last a bullet struck him in the face. His body flew high into the air, then fell and rolled in the dust.

The horses now divided as they came by. Their nostrils were distended at the smell of blood and their eyes ablaze at the sight of their young keeper in the dust. It seemed as if they truly knew and understood all the fearful tragedy of that day and hour. On the second round after the boy fell the black leader seemed to run sidewise, his eyes fastened to his little dead master until they looked frightful from under the black mane. He plunged on around and came to the very edge of the beetling basalt bluff. Then there was the sight as of a sculptured image of a horse poised in mid-air; and a mad, wild cry such as a horse makes but once, a cry indescribable, that filled the valley. Men looked away, and when they looked back the black statue was gone. Then, faithful to the leader, over the bluff into the foaming white river went another horse. And then 10, 20, 50, 500, the whole 5,000! Not one of all the herd was left to the invading victors; and the stream was literally choked with the dead.—Joaquin Miller.

An Anecdote of the Empress Eugenie.

M. Schneider has just published a book in Paris giving several anecdotes of the Emperor Napoleon III. Referring to the Empress, M. Schneider relates what he considers to be an original anecdote about her courage and presence of mind. While the Imperial couple were walking near a field one day their dog Nero barked at some cattle. A furious bull immediately charged the dog, which took refuge between the Emperor's legs. On came the bull, but the Empress, throwing herself before her husband, kept the animal at bay with a long bamboo cane until the herdsman came to the rescue. M. Schneider describes the Empress as acting on the occasion with all the dexterity of a Spanish toreador.

Inventor of the Modern Plow.

An exchange with an antiquarian turn of mind declares that Thomas Jefferson invented the modern plow. There were plows, of course, thousands of years before the time of the sage of Monticello, but he first laid down the mathematical principles that underlie the construction of the plow, and so enabled any blacksmith to make one. A plow consists of two wedges, a cutting and a lifting wedge, and Jefferson discovered and enunciated the proportions of each and the relations each bore to the other. Before his day no two smiths made plows alike; now they are all made in accordance with a mathematical formula.—Hardware.

Mistaken Identity.
