The Stewarts.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—I have in my possession a somewhat remarkable pamphlet, published in London in the year 1800, by John Stewart, nephew of Stewart of Glenbuckie, Feudal Tenant and Clan Major to Drummond of Perth*, who was created Duke of Perth by King James VIII. of Scotland, and Third of England. I enclose an extract from this pamphlet, as some of your Highland readers will feel interested in reading what I believe to be the latest authentic record of Prince Charles Edward, the hero of 1745. The circumstance alluded to by the Prince as an unhappy affair, was as follows: Glenbuckie, as Cadet of the Royal Line, had been appointed by the Duke of Perth to lead his Highland tenants to join Prince Charles Edward, greatly to the chagrin and disappointment of Buchanan of Arnprior, also a Feudal Tenant of the Duke. Glenbuckie, with his own immediate relations and "following," was accompanied by a small body of men under Robert Stewart, the younger, of Strath Gartney, the small Clans of MacLaren and MacLachlan, a body of MacGregors under the command of MacGregor of Glenearnais, and some others, under Drummond MacGregor of Bohaldie, these last being mostly veterans who had been "out" with Rob Roy thirty years previously, in 1715.
The whole party halted for rest and refreshment at Arnprior, where they were received with apparent hospitality and good will. But it would seem that Glenbuckie felt some distrust or suspicion of Arnprior, and accordingly pushed onwards towards Edinburgh, with nearly all the party excepting Glenbuckie, who remained at Arnprior for the night.
Next morning he was found dead in his bed, having been killed by a pistol shot; a discharged pistol was in his hand, placed there, almost beyond a doubt, to make his death appear to have been his own act.
Glenbuckie's men were so disheartened at this catastrophe, that they returned home and never joined the Prince at all, which, as affairs turned out, was a very happy escape for them. Arnprior remained quietly at home, probably thinking himself quite safe; but a letter from him, communicating him as to his previous intentions, was found at Castle Donnie when Lord Lovat was arrested, after the battle of Culloden.
Arnprior was then seized by a troop of the Duke of Cumberland's Dragoons, and carried to the shambles at Carlisle, where he was beheaded with many others, and with circumstances of cruelty of which Cetewayo and his Zulu savages would probably not have been guilty, and could not have exceeded.

Your constant reader,
VICH DRUMMOND NAN ORR.

Extract from the Pamphlet.

I was in the town of Florence, at the Carnival. One day I was upon the grand fashionable promenade there, and happened to meet Mr. John Stewart who was then Steward and Superintendent to Prince Charles, brother to the Cardinal of York, who died at Rome in the year 1788. Mr.
Stewart died at Florence some years ago.
A few words exchanged between us brought many more. Mr. S. asked me my name, "your Prince's name, sir," answered I, "Hal-and what part of Scotland were you born in?" said he, "In the Kirk Town of Ballyshidder." "Ae you the son of Thomas?" "Yes; I was born two men his before your Prince left Culloden Muir?" "soon after the battle of Falkirk, my mother took the child of contention from the Kirk Town to see my father and the Prince?" Mr. Stewart said, "Princes have often been the children of contention to our knowledge; but how are you so?"
"My Father being of the house of Glenbuckie, (Stewart,) and my mother a Campbell, of Broadbairne." He answered: "Very true; I now perfectly understand you. "May I now make bold to ask a request, which I think is in your power to grant me?" "Name it!"
"To have a sight at your Prince!" "Come to-morrow morning at seven," said he,
"and breakfast with me at our house, and you shall have the honor of seeing him, and speaking to him also." I was punctual to the time, and Mr. Stewart showed me the Prince's room door. According to his instructions, I approached the Prince, who, with very great condescension, asked me what family I was of. "The family of Glenbuckie," said I; to which he replied:
"Ah! Poor Alexander! I remember that unhappy affair." After asking me a few more questions, he wished me a good morning, health and happiness, and a good journey to the North.
Fully content, and highly honored, I came down stairs to a breakfast of mutton chops, and a flask of Florence; after which I took my leave of Mr. Stewart. I had remained with him two hours, in which time our conversation was as far North as Arisaig and the Isle of Skye, and from thence to Prestonpans; we rested near an hour about the west end of Loch Earn, not far from where he and I were born.

From that to Comrie and to Crief, To Perth, where rested once our Chief.

The writer of the above named pamphlet was a King's messenger by the appointment of the Hon.able Henry Dundas, Lord Melville. When too old and infirm for rapid travelling, he was appointed to the veteran Battle Axe Guard, by the same Nobleman. It is amusing to note the care with which the King's messenger under King George the third, avoids acknowledging his own allegiance to King Charles the third, and to his own patron Lord Melville, equally.

V. D. N. O.

* Drummond of Perth escaped with his life from France, where he died shortly after the fatal battle of Culloden. His attendant, by the English Government, did not enable him to wrest his estates from his daughter, Miss under entail. She married the Hon.able Mr. Burrell, who took the name of Drummond; their lineal representative is the Earl of Willoughby D'Erasby; he is more fortunate than the heiress of the unhappy Earl of Derwentwater, whose rights were sold for an old song, by one who had no right to sell them. If the same general had been tried at Loch Catinne-side (Strath Gartney) the increasing purchaser under the Government would have had but a short term of his life in his usurped possession.

The name of "Ballyshidder" is locally pronounced as "Bowshidder."

The Great Northwest.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—One of your contemporaries, the advocate for the rail-road companies and land speculators of the United States (whether paid or not I presume to guess) finds two important grounds for exultation—first, that the boom, as he calls it, in land speculation at Winnipeg has subsided; and secondly, that some persons, said to be the correspondents, report a great exodus from Canada to the States. As regards the first, when speculations in land or any other commodity become too rife, there is usually a recession, and Winnipeg is not the only place that, having risen too rapidly, has experienced a temporary fall. The second statement may possibly be right. Sometimes persons go in at one door and out at another.
Some emigrants may have crossed the border southward, but the current of emigration at Emerson, the Gateway City, sets the other way; and it has continued to do so up to the present time to a much greater extent than in any former year.
As to this I can speak from the best authority, and were proof necessary, could appeal to the numberless arrivals and departures from the several Emerson hotels, as given in the papers of that place, as well as to the mention of various poisonous settlements, such as West Lynne, the Mennonite villages, Nelsonville, Clearwater Village, Turle Mountain, &c., on a line where, about two years ago, some explorers had to follow a mere horse trail, and to pass more than one night on the open prairie, under a buffalo robe, and to find themselves covered by two feet of snow in the morning. These plains are now raising quantities of wheat and sending it to Emerson. The States deserve great credit for their enterprise in opening roads and giving access to their territories, where there is no doubt a vast extent of good land, and where many from the Dominion and from the Eastern States are well located. The Canadians travel over these roads, but they are also building their own. Neither party requires false representations as to the relative advantage of either.

Yours, &c.,

O.

Lecture at North Tryon.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—On Monday, the 22nd inst., according to previous announcement, Donald Montgomery, Esq., Superintendent of Education, visited the Tryon North School, and in the evening gave the inhabitants of Tryon quite a literary treat, on the subject of Education.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, and the unfavorable state of the roads, quite a number availed themselves of the opportunity of hearing the learned gentleman.

Previous to the introduction of his subject, the Teachers of the above named School, Miss Reid and Miss Ayers, with their pupils, greeted Mr. Montgomery with a choice piece of vocal music, which was well received, after which the lecturer proceeded to address the audience.

He began by contrasting the present with the past, showing conclusively that the present system of Education, and the manner in which Teachers in general impart knowledge to their pupils, is greatly in advance of the past. He also made reference to the different branches taught in our public schools, and in eloquent and forcible language showed how important it was, first, to acquire a thorough knowledge of the English language before undertaking to study classics or higher branches. He then expatiated at considerable length on the intellectual, moral and physical training of the youth. This part of his lecture applied not only to teachers, but to parents in general,—proving unquestion-ably that parents as well as teachers can accomplish a great deal, by proper training and example, towards educating their children and fitting them for high and noble positions in life. He also recommended large school-houses—not quite as large as the Methodist Church of Tryon, now in construction; but by proper ventilated school-houses, adapted to the requirements of the children.

The lecture throughout was very well appreciated; and the people of P. E. I. should feel proud that the Government appoint such an intelligent and worthy gentleman, Superintendent of Education, as Donald Montgomery, Esq.

On the lecturer resuming his seat, the teachers and pupils, above mentioned, again sang—"Paddle Your Own Canoe," after which the Choir—Mr. Laclaire, Mc-Neill, Esq., and William C. Lee, John Crawford, and Curtis Lord, Esquires, made a few remarks, expressing themselves much pleased with the lecture.

A vote of thanks was then unanimously given to the lecturer, to which he responded in suitable terms, and expressed his willingness to lecture again to the people of Tryon.

Yours, &c.,

Tryon, Jan. 24th, 1882.

Mr. Buckley shipped this week from Halifax for England 1,000 carcasses of mutton and thirty of beef.
