CHAPTER VII.

THE DAIRY.

THE dairy was certainly worth looking at: it was a scene to sicken for with a sort of cadaverous in hot and dusty streets—such a cadaverous, such purity, such fresh fragrances of new-pressed cheese, of firm butter, of wooden vessels perpetually bathed in pure water; such soft coloring of earthenware and creamy surfaces, brown wood and polished tin, gray limestone and rich orange-red rust on the iron weights, and hooks, and hinges. But one only gets a confused notion of these details when they surround a distractingly pretty girl of seventeen, standing on her little pattens and rounding her dimpled arm to lift a pound of butter out of the scale.

Hetty blushed a deep rose-color when Captain Donithorne entered the dairy and spoke to her; but it was not at all a distressed blush, for it was inwreathed with smiles and dimples, and with sparkles from under long curled dark eyelashes; and while her aunt was discoursing to him about the limited amount of milk that was to be spared for butter and cheese so long as the calves were not to be weaned, and the large quantity but inferior quality of milk yielded by the short-horn, which had been bought on experiment, together with other matters which must be interesting to a young gentleman who would one day be a landlord, Hetty tossed and patted her pound of butter with quite a self-possessed, coquettish air, slyly conscious that no turn of her head was lost.

There are various orders of beauty, causing men to make fools of themselves in various styles, from the desperate to the sheepish; but there is one order of beauty which seems made to turn the heads, not only of men, but of all intelligent mammals, even of women. It is a beauty like that of kittens, or very small downy ducks making gentle rippling noises with their soft bills, or babies just beginning to toddle and to engage in conscious mischief—a beauty with which you can never be angry, but that you feel ready to crush for inability to comprehend the state of mind into which it throws you. Hetty Sorrel's was that sort of beauty. Her aunt, Mrs. Poyser, who professed to despise all personal attractions, and intended to be the severest of mentors, continually gazed at Hetty's charms by the sly, fascinated in spite of herself; and after administering such a scolding as naturally flowed from her anxiety to do well by her husband's niece—who had no mother of her own to scold her, poor thing!—she would often confess to her husband, when they were safe out of hearing, that she firmly believed 'the naughtier the little hussy behaved, the prettier she looked.'

It is of little use for me to tell you that Hetty's cheek was like a rose-petal, that dimples played about her pouting lips, that her large dark eyes hid a soft roguishness under their long lashes, and that her curly hair, though all pushed back under her round cap while she was at work, stole back in delicate rings on her forehead, and about her white, shell-like ears; it is of little use for me to say how lovely was the contour of her pink and white neckerchief, tucked into her low, plum-colored stuff bodice, or how the linen butter-making apron, with its bib, seemed a thing to be imitated in silk by duchesses, since it fell in such charming lines, or how her brown stockings and thick-soled, buckled shoes lost all that clumsiness which they must certainly have had when empty of her foot and ankle—of little use, unless you have seen a woman who affected you as Hetty affected her beholders, for otherwise, though you might conjure up the image of a lovely woman, she would not in the least resemble that distracting, kitten-like maiden. I might mention all the divine charms of a bright spring day, but if you had never in your life utterly forgotten yourself in straining your eyes after the mounting lark, or in wandering through the still lanes when the fresh-opened blossoms fill them with a sacred, silent beauty like that of fretted aisles, where would be the use of my descriptive catalogue?

I could never make you know what I meant by a bright spring day. Hetty's was a springtime beauty; it was the beauty of young, frisking things, round-limbed, gamboling, circumventing you by a false air of innocence—the innocence of a young star-browed calf, for example, that, being inclined for a promenade out of bounds, leads you a severe steep-chase over hedge and ditch, and only comes to a stand in the middle of a bog.

And they are the prettiest attitudes and movements into which a pretty girl is thrown making up butter: tossing movements that give a charming curve to the arm, and a sideward inclination of the round white neck; little patting and rolling movements with the palm of the hand, and nice adaptations and finishings, which can not at all be effected without a great play of the pouting mouth and the dark eyes. And then the butter itself seems to communicate a fresh charm; it is so pure, so sweet-scented; it is turned off the mould with such a beautiful, firm surface, like marble in a pale yellow light! Moreover, Hetty was particularly clever at making up the butter; it was the one performance of hers that her aunt allowed to pass without severe criticism; so she handled it with all the grace that belongs to mastery.

I hope you will be ready for a great holiday on the thirtieth of July, Mrs. Poyser, said Captain Donithorne, when he had sufficiently admired the dairy, and given several improvised opinions on Swede turnips and short-horns. 'You know what is to happen then, and I shall expect to be one of the guests who come earliest and leave latest. Will you promise me your hand for two dances, Miss Hetty? If I don't get your promise now, I know I shall hardly have a chance, for all the smart young farmers will take care to secure you.'

Hetty smiled and blushed, but before she could answer, Mrs. Poyser interposed, scandalized at the mere suggestion that the young Squire could be excluded by any partners. 'Indeed, sir, you're very kind to take that notice of her. And I'm sure whenever you're pleased to dance with her, she'll be proud and thankful. If she stood still all the rest of the evening!'

she could answer, Mrs. Poyser interposed, scandalized at the mere suggestion that the young Squire could be excluded by any partners.

'Indeed, sir, you're very kind to take that notice of her. And I'm sure whenever you're pleased to dance with her, she'll be proud and thankful. If she stood still all the rest of the evening!'

'Oh no, no, that would be too cruel to all the other young fellows who can dance. But you will promise me two dances, won't you?' the Captain continued, determined to make Hetty look at him and speak to him.

The Death Penalty.

A WIFE POISONER HUNG—PROTESTING HIS INNOCENCE TO THE LAST.

On the morning of the 5th, at Owen Sound, Ont., Cook Teets, convicted of murdering his wife by administering poison to her a year ago last October, in the township of Arknesia, paid the penalty of his crime on the gallows. His solicitor, during the trial at the Assizes court, made every effort to have the death sentence commuted but without avail. On the night of the 4th he received a telegram from Ottawa, stating that there could be no executive interference. The doomed man received the news with great calmness, in fact ever since his imprisonment in October, 1883, and since the sentence of the court a month ago he has conducted himself with great composure, and manifested the greatest indifference as to the horrible crime with which he was convicted and the terrible end that awaited him. Last night, as the hours were fast flying away and the dreaded moment approached, he occupied the time leisurely talking and chatting with those who happened to visit him. Whenever the subject of the murder was reverted to he protested his innocence, and declared in the most emphatic manner that he was innocent of the charge. On the 4th in the presence of the clergy and others, he made a long statement, in writing, reviewing the whole case and denying the evidence at the trial by the Leppard family. The prisoner was attended by the Rev. J. Howell, Methodist minister and Rev. A. H. Scott, pastor of Knox Church. They visited the cell early this morning, and held conversation and prayer with the doomed man, who appeared quite penitent and prepared for the end, but still declared his innocence. He had no desire to make any statement on the scaffold, and requested the jail officials to have the ceremony as short as possible. At just three minutes to eight o'clock the cell door was opened and the sad procession started, consisting of the prisoner, supported on the right and left by Rev. Messrs. Howell and Scott, and followed by the sheriff, jailor and other officials. The prisoner walked to the scaffold and ascended the steps with all the fortitude and firmness desirable, and took his stand on the trap door of the scaffold. Whilst the hangman was adjusting the noose the prisoner shuddered and gave himself a slight turn to the left, which was followed by a nervous trembling for a few moments, during the delivery of the Lord's prayer by Rev. Mr. Howell. The hangman then drew the bolt and Cook Teets was almost instantaneously ushered into eternity. After the body had been hanging for about fifteen minutes it was cut down and an inquest was held by the coroner. The jury returned a verdict of death by hanging in compliance with the sentence of the court.

The Montreal Carnival.

It has been decided to hold the winter carnival in Montreal this season during the week beginning Jan. 26. The ice palace will be larger, lotter and more elaborate than either of its predecessors. The sleighing procession will include historical and allegorical tableaux, presenting varied scenes of Canadian history and life. The curlers will provide matches at their rinks, and the best players in America are expected to compete. The Victoria Skating Club are expected to give two fancy dress entertainments. The ball will be the season's social event in Montreal. Skating hockey and other sports will be presented at the Victoria and Crystal rinks, costly prizes being offered for the competitions. Among the novelties promised, is a railway across the St. Lawrence river to St. Helen's island, built on the ice, where an Indian village is to spring up with its wigwams, braves, squaws and parades. In addition, the French members of the carnival committee propose the construction of a grand triumphal arch in ice, brilliantly illuminated by night.

Victor Hugo lately inspected Barthodi's statue of Liberty in presence of a large number of American residents of Paris. Hugo expressed his admiration for the statue and added, "This beautiful work of art will constitute a pledge of lasting peace between France and America."

St. Scholastique has a peculiar burial case, the cure refusing to permit the interment of a child's body, because the father had not paid a parish assessment.

The value of lumber and lumber exports from the port of Quebec during the past season was $5,692,578.

The Quebec Government will only rank as an ordinary creditor against the Exchange Bank.

The principal of minority representation is not provided for in the Redistribution Bill.

Toronto Salvationists have purchased a church for a new barracks.
