Sea Memories.

[We clip the following from the Winnipeg Daily Times.]
No more for us the seaward breeze at eve
And surging wave shall sigh along the twilight shores,
Of fair Prince Edward, in the billowy gulf.
No more for us the sea-gull wild,
Drifting on idle pinions in the balmy air,
Shal landward come from the far-rolling wave.
No more for us will the great sun descend
In gorgeous splendor to his ocean bath,
Beyond the gray horizon slowly dipping down
No more for us to wander far
In quiet meditation o'er the gleaming sands,
Towards the distant headland's hoary base.
No more for us to see along the strand
Flotsam and jetsam from the ocean strewn,
And bers and there the white-ribbed, shattered hulk
Of some old merchantman that oft had spread
Her flapping canvas to the favorite breeze,
Th' storming, and wave, and ever-weakening gr,
In some ten-pestuous, awful, moonless night,
Hear the sullen roar of Heaven's artillery,
Hail and her groaning on the sands to die.
No more for us to watch the driving storm
Pass terribly along the inky breast
Of furious ocean's thunder-echoing wave.
Farewell, dear Island home, thy wandering sons,
Here, in the centre of a glorious continent,
Shall ever cherish in their loyal hearts
The sweetest memories of thine and thee.
W. C. HARRIS, Winnipeg.

Relations Between Husband and Wife.

Mr. Justice Galt, Ottawa, recently delivered a decision which is of much interest to husbands, wives, tradesmen, and the public generally. It appears that an Ottawa woman made a purchase of dry goods from a well known dry goods firm in that city, and ordered them to be charged to her husband's account. As her husband's credit was good no questions were asked and the goods were delivered. In the usual time the bill was presented to the husband and payment requested. The gentleman refused payment and repudiated any responsibility in the matter, on the ground that he had forbidden his wife to purchase goods anywhere in his name. The dry goods men sought by process of law to induce the gentleman to take a different view of the subject, thinking, not without reason, that as no public announcement had been made of his determination to put an end to his wife's shopping proclivities, at least so far as his paying for her purchases was concerned, they had good grounds for action. The case was tried before Mr. Justice Galt, and the husband produced a servant girl as a witness that he had given his wife positive orders to buy no goods at any of the stores on his account. The purchase was made after this order had been given, and the plaintiffs were non-suited, the court holding that the husband's liability was thus extinguished, although the order was privately given.

The Egyptian Control.

There is good ground to believe that the days of the Egyptian control are numbered. It was at all times an iniquitous institution; it was imposed on the people without their consent; it extracted a usurious rate of interest from the tax-payers; it supported a host of office-holders; it was powerless to maintain itself when the time of trial came; it was immoral in its origin and impotent in its conclusion. Therefore its abolition will be a matter of congratulation, and France, if she is wise, and does not listen to M. Gambetta's bombast, will colonize instead of controlling, and by re-peopling the cities of the Nile Delta with her merchants, her engineers, her artisans, will soon acquire by the arts of peace ten times the influence which England will strive to maintain by her late prosperity to France. Her subsequent disasters she owed to the financial birds of prey, who, gathering on the London Exchange, are again whetting their beaks and clamoring for annexation.
—N. Y. Herald.

The Enormous Size of London.

London has a larger population than many a European State with a sovereign and a parliament. At the census of 1881 the area of metropolitan taxation and police contained 4,764,312 persons. Thus there are in London more than double the number of people in Denmark, including Greenland; nearly three times as many as in Greece; more than eighteen times the population of Montenegro; some thousands more than Portugal, including the Azores and Madeira; nearly treble the population of Serbia; more than double that of Bulgaria; three-quarters of a million more than in Holland; more than Sweden or Norway or Switzerland. And yet this splendid capital, the most populous and wealthy city the world has ever seen is practically without a Government.

Canadian Salmon and Lobsters Abroad.

It appears that during the past season several steamers provided with refrigerators have left the lower Canadian ports with cargoes of fresh salmon for Marseilles, and it is stated that a considerable quantity has found its way to St. Petersburg through the Paris markets, and the perfection to which the refrigerating system has been carried has revolutionized the continental salmon business. The exports of fresh salmon having proved successful there is no reason why fresh lobster shipments should not be equally prosperous. A London exchange, commenting on this subject, says that the lobsters can be brought to Europe without the loss of the creamy fat which is common to that fish.

Germany and Protection.

Germany has made wonderful strides in manufacturing industries since the establishment of the Zollverein and protection. The Germans formerly bought all their cotton goods from England and France. In 1869 there were 5,000,000 spindles at work in the Zollverein territory, and they not only supplied their own people, but produced great quantities for export. In woollen goods even greater progress was made. In 1825 Germany sent 28,000,000 pounds of unmanufactured wool into England. In 1869 the Zollverein States imported 30,000,000 pounds of wool for their own use, and sent abroad but 9,400,000 pounds of raw wool. It is the same thing with iron, silk, pottery, glassware, etc. The enormous Krupp iron works—the largest in the world—are the direct result of the Zollverein's protection.

Advertising.

Advertisements of a good fresh nature are not the least valuable and interesting portion of a newspaper, and if artistically displayed by a skillful compositor, become a feature of a newspaper. They are news of the greatest importance to many readers who gain through them a knowledge of where special goods can be obtained, who makes or keeps them, and other valuable information. The proportion of "catch trade," if it could be arrived at, would not amount to ten per cent of most firms' transactions. A prominent manufacturer and dealer told us recently "that he attributed his success to a liberal amount of advertising." The statement could be made by thousands in the country as their experience. Skillful judicious placing of business cards in a medium that reaches the class of people desired for a business connection is "bread cast upon the waters" that must return with profit. Sagacious buyers have come to look upon firms who patronize the press freely as being men of enlarged ideas with a capacity for manipulating a large and growing business, who have something for sale and desire to have it known. They have very curiously found out that men who bore with an anger instead of a gimlet generally have the bargains. They believe a man who is too poor to make his business known is too impoverished to do business.

The Egyptian Control.

There is good ground to believe that the days of the Egyptian control are numbered. It was at all times an iniquitous institution; it was imposed on the people without their consent; it extracted a usurious rate of interest from the tax-payers; it supported a host of office-holders; it was powerless to maintain itself when the time of trial came; it was immoral in its origin and impotent in its conclusion. Prince Arthur Protects the Nuns at Ramleh.

The Daughters of Zion have a convent and institution of their order at Ramleh. They write in a tone of deep gratitude for the protection their convent received from the Duke of Connaught when he occupied that town. His Royal Highness took up his quarters in the convent itself, and gave strict orders that the chapel and everything sacred connected with it should be respected. The good sisters, therefore, upon their return to their convent, had good reason to be thankful to the royal Duke and very thankful they are to his Royal Highness' protection and courtesy.
