Faure May Offer Plan For Using Arms Money To Up Living Standards

PARIS (Reuters)—Premier Edgar Faure may offer the Geneva "summit" conference a plan for channeling off money from world arms production into a fund to raise world-wide living standards, usually reliable sources here said Monday.

Special emphasis would be put on raising the living standards of underdeveloped countries, the sources said. But the fund would be brought into play to some extent everywhere.

Faure is said to believe such a plan would lessen international tension through limiting military spending and armed strength.

At the same time, it would make possible bigger exports from highly industrialized and food-rich nations to more backward areas. It would also make it easier to balance national budgets disrupted by arms spending, particularly in hard-pressed France.

HOPES PLAN ACCEPTED
The sources said Faure hopes to have his project—or parts of it—integrated into the general security and disarmament plan that may be offered Russia in return for renunciation of Germany.

The premier hopes to have a definite French decision on the plan before the three Western foreign ministers meet here Friday, the informants added.

The foreign ministers' meeting will pave the way for the Geneva meeting next Monday of Prime Minister Eden, President Eisenhower, Faure and Russian Premier Nikolai Bulganin. Disarmament is expected to be a key subject at this top-level conference to reduce international tension.

Madeline, and St. Joseph's Oratory in Montreal.

Miss Ethel Finnan and Mrs. Frank Gallant were the winners of the St. Anne trip tickets to the pilgrimage.

Mr. Felix Arsenault of Woodstock entered the P.C. Hospital on July 2, where he immediately underwent an appendectomy. His many friends wish him a speedy recuperation.

May Revise Small Loans Act

OTTAWA (CP)—The government may consider revision of the Small Loans Act this summer, Finance Minister Harris said Tuesday.

He informed Hazen Argue (CCF—Assiniboia) in the Commons that interested persons already have been consulted on the matter.

Mr. Argue had asked whether a parliamentary committee would inquire into the act at the next session.

The CCF member has been sponsoring a private bill which would reduce interest rates charged by small loan companies to one per cent a month from two. He has said that Canadians are paying 24 per cent a year interest on small loans up to the legal limit of $500 a loan.

The government has opposed the bill on the ground that if the rates under the present act were lowered, other powers already are established.

Experts are trying to solve complex technical and political questions involved in the plan. One question raised, the sources said, is whether Russian membership in the world fund would not give Russia a chance to spread her influence in backward territories where other powers already are established.
