Grief.

Grief is not sin. The sin consists only in the excess of grief; and grief is excessive when it incapacitates us for the duties of our station, or leads us to distrust of our God. This, in truth, is the struggle of human nature during the threescore years and ten of its trial—to bring the human will into subjection to the Divine. The question is not as to the amount of pain and grief which it may cost to obey, but whether notwithstanding the pain and grief we are ready to submit, and from our trust in God's goodness, through faith, to acquiesce with thankfulness in the dispensations of Providence, however painful they may prove to be. When God takes away the friend of our bosom, or the child of our affection, He does not call upon us to rejoice, but He simply requires us to be resigned—that is, submissively to yield what God requires of us under the conviction suggested by faith, that is best that so it should be. There is no sin in praying, "Father, let this cup pass from me," for so prayed our sinless Lord; but there would be sin in failing to say "Father not my will but Thine be done," when the will of Father that the cup should not pass from us is declared—Ex.

To Be Misunderstood.

To be misunderstood even by those whom one loves is the cross and bitterness of life. It is the secret of that sad and melancholy smile on the lips of great men which so few understand; it is the cruellest trial reserved for self-devotion; it is what must have often wrung the heart of the Son of Man; and if God could suffer, it would be the wound we should be ever inflicting upon him. He also—He above all—is the most misunderstood, the least comprehended. Alas! alas! Never to tire, never to grow cold; to be patient sympathetic, tender, to look for the budding flower and the opening heart; to hope always like God; to love always—this is duty.—Canadian Churchman.

Excuses.

Take church-going and store going. Every morning the man is at his business; nothing keeps him from it but the grip of some disease which will not let him out of the house. He may feel inert, but he goes. He may have a headache, but off he starts; and when he is there how interested he is—how absorbed, how alert, how devoted. That is store-going, and now take the same man, and look at his church going. What a contrast! "I have a headache; I do not think I will go to church." It rains hard, and it is so cold I will not venture out. "I feel tired; I will stay at home and rest," and often when he goes, how he lolls about and looks around and lets his mind wander. Yes you say, but one is business to which we must attend; we will lose our place or our money; and the other is well what is it? Is it an important thing? Is it not God's business? Is it not a very holy, a very solemn, a very urgent affair? Does not the welfare of the soul depend very much upon it? Can it be neglected with impunity? Think of those words of your Master, in Malachi: "A son honoureth his father, and a servant his master; if, then, I be a father, where is mine honour: and if I be a master, where is my fear?"—Clinton Locke, D. D.

Over and over and over again the old truth comes back to us, that no man is good for much till he has suffered a great sorrow. The baptism of pain is one of the instrumentalities which God uses for purging away the dross of our natures and making us fit to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. Not those who escaped the fiery trial, but those who have gone through it and come out unhurt and glorified, are to be envied. God knows what is best for us. Therefore He sends first one affliction and then another upon us. Sometimes because He sees it to be necessary, He lifts the very flood gates, and allows wave after wave of misfortune to sweep over us. If we have the right stuff in us, we shall be helped and not harmed by these seeming calamities.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

LORD SALISBURY ON UPPER HOUSES.

In his speech before the Constitutional Club, on December 16th, Lord Salisbury treated, among other things, the agitation against the House of Lords. He spoke as follows:—

It seems to me to be a very commonly received doctrine among our opponents that the House of Lords is to be swept away. I do not know how it is to be done, because the prospects of the House of Lords itself lending any assistance to that operation is remote. (Laughter) But I call your attention to it rather to draw the moral. The action of the House of Lords has unfortunately been to delay for the judgment of the country matters on which it thought the House of Commons and the country were not agreed. (Cheers.) That is what has been established by the practice of many years, and when our opponents wish to abolish the House of Lords, the inevitable inference is that they desire to pass, before the country should have time to intervene, something upon which the House of Commons and the country are, not one; and you should consider how very near we have been to that predicament. They tell us that the House of Lords interferes with the judgments of the House of Commons; but what are the judgments of the House of Commons with which the House of Lords has interfered? I am speaking of the first class of questions. It is curious that twice in our recent history—and by that I mean in the last two centuries—twice on great occasions the House of Lords intervened to veto the action of the House of Commons, and to insist that the country should be consulted. The first occasion was the celebrated Fox's India bill, of which the object was to place the whole patronage of India in such hands that the House of Commons might be successfully and safely manipulated for the future. That promising plan was rejected by the House of Lords and was rejected indignantly by the country. (Cheers.) One hundred and ten years passed away, and a Radical Government were found forwarding a bill by which 83 members of Parliament, practically divorced from all responsibility to their constituents, would be all at the command of the Minister of the day, and would, under such terms as it was in his power to offer, to a certain extent in every division that the Minister who created them might desire. Again that was sent up to the House of Lords; again the convention arrangement was negatived; and again the country indignantly endorsed the decision of the House of Lords. (Cheers.) But when I am told that there are people who think they can abolish the second Chamber, and leave the first chamber absolutely at liberty to decide without reference to the country, even on the organic constitution of its own body, I ask you to consider how near that abyss you were. There was every ground for inducing a Minister to have been delayed until the country could have been consulted. Great Britain was known to have been one way; Great Britain mingled with Ireland, would have been the other. It was known there was only a majority of 34 members to carry this great alteration in the constitution. It was resisted with all the force that the Opposition could bring to bear; nevertheless, if the House of Lords had not been there, it would now be the law of this country (Hear, hear.) Whatever discussions may be raised, and they are many, upon the character, upon the action, and upon the theory of the House of Lords, you yet must remember that the people of this country will never be content to part with a check which has been proved by practice to be indispensable until another check that can do its work can be supplied. (Cheers.)

ABOUT RECIPROCITY.

Str.—Thinking a few lines on Reciprocity might be of interest I enclose the following: It seems to me a pity that greater interest on both sides of the line is not taken in the work of the commission now sitting, part of whose mission is to bring this about. It scarcely enters in the mind of the conglomerate mill operators and toolers in New England that their hard earned dollars might be made to buy more by such interest. A few protected interests, among them coal and lumber, do not fail to use their powerful influence with the Government to thwart this as was told by an influential journal the other morning. The mass of people, however, are to be action by something out of the common. Let the Government take care of itself. They have religiously voted for McKim or Bryan as his case may be and then a duty well done ends here. They are towards the right of agitation and orderly instruction to those whom their votes bid make laws, as the attitude of the woman towards the bank teller, who, when told she would have to be introduced said, she did not wish to know him. Being away from home for some time I do not know how P. E. Islanders stand in this matter. But from my knowledge of them, ignorance was never bliss among them; intelligent, brave and industrious, my sympathies will ever be with them. It may be that the small representation at Ottawa may be discouraging. As you know the combined vote of the Lower Provinces could not at all in a matter strictly Canadian or one where Canadian interests were at stake, yet mutual concessions should be made. The Montague farmer may know little about the denizens of Manitoba, yet their interests are interwoven; both would claim the right to live.

The greatest good to the greatest number is an axiom, nowhere more applicable than in the matter of international trade. No party feud or petted industry should stand in the way of the general good. The voice of public sentiment in Prince Edward Island should be unmistakably heard in this matter of reciprocity, for a market for the product of her farmers should be of vital import to every dweller on this gem set in the St. Lawrence.

Boston, Jan 6, 1899.

The dyspeptic carries a dreadful load on his back. It seems as if he were really made up of two men. One of them ambitious, brainy and energetic; the other sick, listless, peevish and without force. The weak man weighs the other one down. The dyspeptic may be able to do pretty good work one day, and the next day because of some little indiscretion in eating he may be able to do nothing at all. Most cases of dyspepsia start with constipation. Constipation is the cause of nine-tenths of all human sickness. Some of its symptoms are sick and bilious headache, dizziness, sour stomach, loss of appetite, foul breath, windy belching, heartburn, pain and distress after eating. All these are indicative of derangement of the liver, stomach and bowels, and all are caused by constipation. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the quickest, easiest and most certain cure for this condition. They are not violent in action. NOTES AND COMMENTS.

—The Montreal Gazette has gone to the trouble to figure out that women rule over 840,000,000 people, or nearly half the earth's population. An Ottawa paper says that these figures, of course, refer to the women who rule by divine right; the dear things rule the other half of the world by divine might.

—The London Times' correspondent telegraphs that Russia is showing great naval and military activity. The correspondent, who telegraphs from Sebastopol, and who has been touring in European Russia for two months to discover if possible some evidence on the part of the Russian Government to give effect to the disarmament proposals of Emperor Nicholas, says: "At all the naval dockyards I found feverish activity. Not a man has been withdrawn from the frontiers. The Ministers of War and Marine have been inspecting all the important military and naval stations, urging an acceleration of the preparations of defence, but apparently never mentioning the Czar's manifesto. The number of men enrolled in the army and navy during the months of October and November was larger than ever. Reinforcements are being sent to the Far East as fast as they can be transported, while the garrisons along the Russo-Turkish frontier are being largely increased."

New Year's naval estimates it is asserted will provide for eight new battleships, two of first-class.
