

THE WAR-TRAIL!

CHAPTER XXXIII. A BUCKING-SHOT.

THOUGH our enemy was once more in motion, we no longer anticipated a direct attack; the time for that had passed.

"Cowardly skunks!" muttered Rube; "they hadn't the pluck to charge us!

"What do you think it is, Billee?" "I'm thinkin', old boy," replied Garey, whose keen grey eye had been for some time fixed on the movement of the guerrilla.

"Yar right," assented Rube; "they'd thur gamel! Scalp me ef 'tain't. Look yander!

The horsemen were no longer in line, nor formed in any fashion. Irregularly grouped, they exhibited a "clump" upon the prairie, some standing still, others in motion. As Rube muttered the last words, one of them was seen to shoot out from the main body, and then another and another, until five of the band, thus deployed, galloped round us in circles.

We observed that the five had left their lances behind them, and carried only their carbines.

We were not astonished at this; we divined the intention of our enemies. They were about to practise an old prairie-tactic—a stratagem of the horse-Indian, with which all three of us were familiar. We might have been more apprehensive about the result had it been really Indians who were going to practise the manoeuvre—since in an attack of this kind, the bow, with its many missiles in a minute, is far more dangerous than either carbine or rifle.

But the fact that our assailants understood the stratagem told us we were opposed to men who had seen Indian-fight—no doubt, the pick men of the frontier—and to defend ourselves would require all the courage and cunning we possessed.

It did not surprise us that only a portion of the band galloped out to effect the surround; there was design in that, and we knew it.

The five who had been detached were to wheel round us in circles; dash at intervals within range, fire their carbines, and if possible, draw the fire of our rifles.

This purpose effected, the other six—who already approached as near as was safe for them—would charge forward, empty their guns, and then use their lances with effect.

Of this last weapon my companions had more dread than of all the others carried by our foes. They had reason. They knew that our rifles once empty, the lance could be used beyond pistol-range; and by such men, with far surer aim than either carbine or escopette!

We were allowed but scant time to entertain these doubts, fears, and conjectures, or to communicate them to one another. They passed before us like the lightning's flash; the quicker that they were old thoughts—things familiar from experience. We were conscious that the stratagem of our enemy had increased the peril of our situation; but we thought not yet of yielding to despair.

In an instant we had altered our relative positions. The three of us no longer fronted in one direction, but stood back to back—each to guard the third of the circle before his face. Thus stood we, rifles in hand.

The five horsemen were not slow in the execution of their manoeuvre. Once or twice they galloped round us in a wide circle; and then following a spiral curve, drew nearer and nearer. When within carbine range, each fired his piece; and, retreating outwards upon the main body, hastily exchanged his empty gun for one that was loaded, and galloped back as before.

In the first volley, most of their bullets discharged at random, had passed over our heads. We heard them hissing in the air high above us. One, however, had been better aimed, and struck Rube's mare in the hip, causing the old muzzang to squeal and kick violently. It did but little damage, though it was an earnest of what we might expect; and it was with increased apprehension that we saw the horsemen come back on their circling career.
