

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Monday, February 13.

HOUSE IN COMMITTEE ON THE ADDRESS IN REPLY TO THE PARLIAMENTARY SPEECH AT THE OPENING OF THE SESSION.

Mr. WHELAN in the Chair.

(Continued from our last.)

Mr. DAVES. The position of the Government upon the very subject of the Charter being driven from power, by a successful though unprincipled, faction, is one of which every man who is not a party to the charge has been, or can be, preferred against to prove that, under their management... Mr. DAVES. The position of the Government upon the very subject of the Charter being driven from power, by a successful though unprincipled, faction, is one of which every man who is not a party to the charge has been, or can be, preferred against to prove that, under their management... Mr. DAVES. The position of the Government upon the very subject of the Charter being driven from power, by a successful though unprincipled, faction, is one of which every man who is not a party to the charge has been, or can be, preferred against to prove that, under their management...

people, their vassalage and serfdom were undiminished and unrelieved: the state and condition of the community were, in no way, improved... Mr. DAVES. The position of the Government upon the very subject of the Charter being driven from power, by a successful though unprincipled, faction, is one of which every man who is not a party to the charge has been, or can be, preferred against to prove that, under their management... Mr. DAVES. The position of the Government upon the very subject of the Charter being driven from power, by a successful though unprincipled, faction, is one of which every man who is not a party to the charge has been, or can be, preferred against to prove that, under their management...

particularly by the hon. member for Belfast (Mr. DAVES) that, amongst the most distinguished names of the present Government, there are many who are not only ignorant of the duties of their appointments... Mr. DAVES. The position of the Government upon the very subject of the Charter being driven from power, by a successful though unprincipled, faction, is one of which every man who is not a party to the charge has been, or can be, preferred against to prove that, under their management... Mr. DAVES. The position of the Government upon the very subject of the Charter being driven from power, by a successful though unprincipled, faction, is one of which every man who is not a party to the charge has been, or can be, preferred against to prove that, under their management...

and, declared to be open to every one. No man was allowed to suffer in his person, freedom, or property, unless by the judgment of a court of law... Mr. DAVES. The position of the Government upon the very subject of the Charter being driven from power, by a successful though unprincipled, faction, is one of which every man who is not a party to the charge has been, or can be, preferred against to prove that, under their management... Mr. DAVES. The position of the Government upon the very subject of the Charter being driven from power, by a successful though unprincipled, faction, is one of which every man who is not a party to the charge has been, or can be, preferred against to prove that, under their management...

the Assembly—and that they were opposed to the Departmental System, because they were opposed to every thing like corruption. (To be continued.) R. B. LAVIN, Reporter. HASZARD'S GAZETTE. Tuesday, March 7, 1854. "Dear the array of voters at the meetings of in-memoriam... Mr. DAVES. The position of the Government upon the very subject of the Charter being driven from power, by a successful though unprincipled, faction, is one of which every man who is not a party to the charge has been, or can be, preferred against to prove that, under their management... Mr. DAVES. The position of the Government upon the very subject of the Charter being driven from power, by a successful though unprincipled, faction, is one of which every man who is not a party to the charge has been, or can be, preferred against to prove that, under their management...