ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

"She always seemed so self-sufficient" Ann offered of a woman we both knew. "If I had suspected she felt so dejected, I would have given her a word of encouragement—but isn't that the way, Ellen? Our senses seem to be so tuned to our own lives we don't take much stock of the cares and worries of others—until it's too late to do much about it."

She smoothed an imaginary wrinkle from her gown in a manner she has when concentrating. "It's not that we don't have the time. It's just...well, you know Ellen, that item in our W.I. Collect...how does it go? 'And O, Lord God, help us to be kind!' That, I think is what we neglect. Oh, not intentionally—just an omission. Perhaps some other attention we allow to drift away on a sigh, a word we forget to say, a smile we don't bother to bestow."

Ann had called a minute on her way to the city. She is a farm-woman and mother; slight and fair, her brown hair now threading with silver. She is both clever and smart, handling her role of wife and mother admirably and always with apparent ease. We think the latter is due to her habit of sandwiching smaller items between the larger, beating them like a mallet, mending a sock, sewing on a button in those odd minutes others might waste.

Her dress was of silken material, soft and shining, little sprigs of flowers in mauve scattered intriguingly over the white background. She wore plain, the skirt fashioned in a pleasing fullness. Her earrings were little coiled pieces of gold as was the pin at her neck, but larger and more quaint, harking back, we supposed, to the days of her mother. "There were two items I promised myself I should do this week. Yes," she nodded, "a sick call and a letter I've been wanting to write. But did I! I wonder, Ellen," she said half-laughing, "if our thoughts of others—our spirit of good intent ever Continued on page 3"

Queen Mary Needlework Guild

The annual display of work of the Queen Mary Needlework Guild was held in the writing room of "The Charlottetown" on Thursday, May 29th. Many members and friends came in during the afternoon to see the unusually large assortment of children's clothing for the Prince Edward Island Protestant Orphanage and for the Queen Mary Maternity Hospital in London.

Also on display was a very beautiful book on the life of Queen Mary, a gift to the hon. president, Mrs. Bartlett and the members of the Guild from Mrs. Thane Campbell, wife of the Chief Justice. Queen Mary's Christmas card was also in evidence.

On tables down the centre and around the sides of the writing room were 175 articles of children's wear for the Orphanage, the largest donation for that purpose ever given by the Guild.

The box for the Queen Mary Maternity Hospital was sent on June 7th, consisting of 118 babies' woolies, etc.

Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

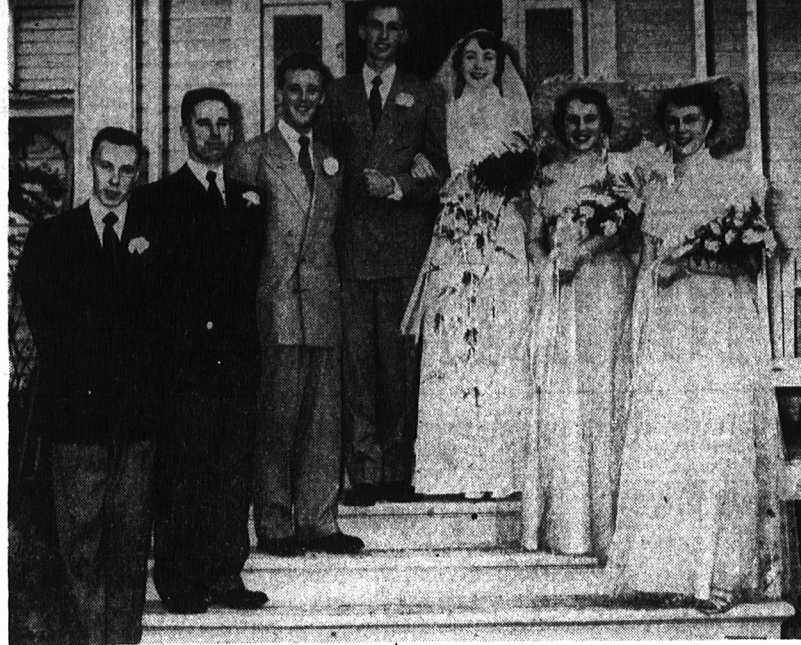

Q. Just what is a "brunch"? A. This is a coined word denoting breakfast and lunch combined. It usually is served before 12 o'clock noon, and the menu may be either that for a regular breakfast or luncheon, or a combination of both. Invitations are very informal.

Q. What should I provide for a font at a home christening? A. A silver bowl usually, but if such is not available, a crystal bowl or a china bowl with a ring of flowers or ivy around it will serve very well.

Q. Should a formal acceptance of an invitation be dated? A. No. The date upon which the function is to occur must, however, be mentioned in the acceptance.

Q. When a man has just given his fiancée an engagement ring, and they decide to have it insured, who pays for this? A. The man—if he can.

DOROTHY DIX'S COLUMN—

Mother At Fault

Children's Waywardness Stems From Her Lack Of Stability

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: I am absolutely desperate. I have tried so hard to raise my family well, yet two of my daughters are giving me a terrible time; they skip school, run around with questionable companions, and come in at all hours. One is such a problem that the court has sent her back to live with my first husband, whom she hasn't seen in fourteen years. He has remarried, and I'm sure she'll cause enough trouble there to break up the home—as she has mine.

I have been married to my second husband for thirteen years, and we aren't happy at all. In fact, I'm seriously thinking of divorcing him. I've seen a psychiatrist, and he advises that I leave my family, but I love my three girls still at home and hate to go. I need a little love and understanding.

ANSWER: You need a little love and understanding, you say, but has it ever occurred to you that that's exactly what your children have needed and apparently never received? Their lives have been lived in one warring house after another. You have never given them the sort of family life that is rightfully theirs, so how can you expect filial devotion and well-balanced children?

Perhaps your daughter's stepmother can take a firmer grasp on the problem and give the child a better perspective on life. Only a woman of tremendous sympathetic perception can do the job, and both you and your daughter will be very fortunate if the stepmother has it.

YOU HAVE FAILED THEM

I'm afraid you've rather fallen down on the job of raising your daughters. While realizing that many divorces are unavoidable, I cannot understand a mother who carries her children over into a second marriage with little or no effort to guard their futures. Since you admit that the thirteen years of your second marriage have been unhappy, surely here can be little doubt in your mind as to where your children's instability stems from!

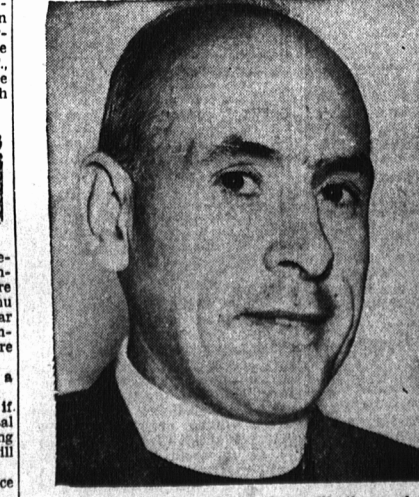

Instead of being so resigned to a second divorce, better make a new start and give the younger children a halfway decent chance to lead a normal life. Leaving the family to fend for itself will achieve nothing but to provide a sap to your own neurotic irresponsibility. A psychiatrist might help you, but I couldn't put much confidence in a professional man who would hand out as poor advice as you received. Why not try a family counselor, who will be more interested in keeping your family together than rending it apart?

DEAR MISS DIX: Several months ago I met a girl of 25, and from the beginning I liked her. She went on two dates with me, but at the same time I knew she was going out with other boys. She was quite frank about this. Whenever I'd call her, after the second date, she would be too busy to go out, or have some other excuse. I like her so much that I hate to give up.

ANSWER: Circumstances indicate quite conclusively, and regretfully for you, that the girl of your dreams is rather more fond of one of the other boys than of you. You might continue your campaign of conquest for a while longer, at least, but I'm afraid it will be futile. Of course "Faint heart n'er won fair lady"—a good quotation as far as it goes, but one not to be overly trusted. You also must know when to retire from battle.

DEAR MISS DIX: I'm married to a man who has never grown up. In our ten months of marriage he has not acquired adult habits. He collects all sorts of things and keeps them around the house—papers, magazines, match covers, books, records, etc. The only thing

The Stars Say --

By Genevieve Kemble

For Tomorrow It is more than probable that this day may inaugurate a whirl of activities in which romance, travel, much excitement and high emotional stresses may be characterized as truly felicitous. The accent is on gayety, novel experiences, sudden and unpredictable crises. While these may bring unforgettable joy, there is, as well, a deep undertone of spiritual or emotional elation or perhaps a state to bless or sanctify some unusual occasion.

If It Is Your Birthday Those whose birthday it is may be justified in expecting a year of the unusual, unpredictable, novel and exciting, with strange new urges or contacts—dramatic, unique, even fantastic. These novel experiences may have reactions on deeper inner reaches as well as on the physical environs, with mental drive or creative demand for vivid or spectacular expression. Under spur of these strange emotions and drives, it might be wise to maintain practical, conventional poise, not succumbing to erratic impulses or mystical experiments.

A child born on this day could have an unique, novel, strange and sensational niche in life, with great creative talent, unusual insight. It would be well to guide and direct its ideas and emotions cautiously.

Day After Tomorrow The horoscope holds augury of a particularly lively and eventful state of affairs largely in the home. The exciting and stepped-up programs seem to be in relation to social, romantic or conjugal "functions" in which more than ordinary preparations seem to be imperative. The extra excitement and flurry may not sit well with the elders, who may be decidedly lacking in the spirit of co-operation in festive or "party" doings.

For the Birthday Those whose birthday it is may anticipate a very lively and constructive year, with much stirring in workaday ventures, although stress and particular commotion may be in connection with home affairs. Domestic or romantic celebrations, or practical strenuous efforts revolve about quite enjoyable and felicitous home doings. These may not have the gracious support or tolerance of the elderly or ailing, perhaps. Be kind to these recalcitrants.

A child born on this day, while lively and constructive, has a gay and pleasant domestic quality, making the fireside the scene of its interest and ambitions.

That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D. CANCER IS CURABLE IF DIAGNOSED AND TREATED EARLY

Although the Annual Cancer Crusade occurred in April, as cancer is ever more and more with us it would be well for all of us to remember some of the dramatic truths presented in that campaign.

"Some 22,000,000 living Americans will die of cancer if present rate continues, but a large percentage of them could be saved by early diagnosis and expert care. Today kills more children from three to 15 years of age than does any other disease. If women would examine their breasts once a month and get twice a year for examination of pelvic organs, of the 90,000 who each year develop cancer of the breast and uterus, 65,000 could be cured. Several hundred thousand men, women and children have been cured of cancer. Cancer is curable."

In addition to the above general information, issued by the American Cancer Society, it would be well for us all to strike back at cancer by remembering and acting on the seven cancer signals.

- 1. Any sore throat that does not heal. Hoarseness that persists for a long time. This warning comes from high authorities including the outstanding throat specialists the Drs. Chevalier Jackson of Philadelphia.
2. A lump or thickening in the breast or elsewhere.
3. Unusual bleeding or discharge from any source of the body.
4. Any change in a wart or a mole such as enlargement or change in color.
5. Persistent indigestion or difficulty in swallowing.
6. Persistent cough, especially with hoarseness.
7. Any change in normal bowel habits.

If one of these symptoms develops, you will probably be the first to notice it. Your first thought should be to consult your family physician. Your prompt action may save your life.

Some of the large program outlined in the literature published by American Cancer Society in their appeal for funds can be gained when, this year, the Society helps finance the research of 900 investigators in 100 laboratories and universities in 35 states. Through fellowships, American Cancer Society is training 78 young men and women to carry on research in the future. The address of the Society is 54 Beaver Street, New York 4, N. Y.

Morning Smile

In fact their uncle was beginning to fear it was going to be a permanent infliction. But eventually they went home. "Well," asked their father, "was your uncle glad to see you?" "Charlie's face lit up with delight. "Gladi!" he echoed. "Why, Dad, he wanted to know why we didn't bring you, Mother, the cat, the dog, the goldfish."
