MCCARTHY AND U. S. DEFENCE DEPT. IN DEADLOCK ON SECRECY OF NAMES

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senator Joseph McCarthy and the defence department got into a deadlock Thursday night on the question of releasing the names of 133 suspected security risks who, the senator says, are working in U.S. defence plants.

McCarthy, under prodding from Democrats and army counsel, announced he was offering the names to the Pentagon — but on condition they be kept secret for the time being.

The defence department replied that it wants the names—but with no secrecy strings attached. McCarthy then told reporters he would not hand over the names until the Pentagon promises not to make them public.

He fixed the exact number of names on his list at 133. Thursday's fust over security risks developed after Senator Everett Dirksen (Rep. Ill.) broke a six-week deadlock and read into the hearing record the first of the monitored telephone calls which have been stirring up controversy ever since the televised hearings began more than a month ago.

Basic Issues: Basic issues the investigation set out to decide are these: 1. Whether McCarthy and his chief counsel, Roy Cohn, tried by improper means to get favored treatment for Pte. G. David Schine, a former sub-committee consultant who was drafted into the army.

2. Whether Army Secretary Robert Stevens and army counsel John G. Adams used Schine as a "hostage" in an effort to blackmail the sub-committee out of investigating alleged subversive activity at Ft. Monmouth, N.J., where the army signal corps radar laboratories are located.

It was with reference to a Stevens-McCarthy meeting that Stevens told Dirksen, according to the monitored telephone call transcript: "It worked just about like I told you it would, and I can't buy it. I am going to have to do something. It may get drastic. . . I think I have been absolutely crucified and the services along with men."

"This thing is just incredible, and the press, because I can't explain what happened, is just absolutely going to say I am a yellow-belly and have quit and capitulated." Stevens had accused McCarthy of "abusing" Zwicker, commander of Camp Kilmer, N.J., on the witness stand.

McCarthy refused to let his own monitored calls be used unless every such call bearing on the controversy is admitted into evidence. Cohn testified under cross-examination that the army side is trying to withhold some calls.

ARMY STAND ON CALLS: The army position was that calls between officials of the executive branch cannot be disclosed, because of a presidential order. In other main developments: 1. Welch tried to show through questioning of Cohn that the McCarthy sub-committee has sought to get itself up as a sort of court of appeals with jurisdiction over federal loyalty — security boards.

Cohn replied that board members who reach their decisions fairly have no cause for anxiety. 2. Cohn made a categorical denial of the "pressure" charges hurled at him and McCarthy by the army side, and did so after Senator Henry Jackson (Dem.-Wash.) read the perjury law to him. The McCarthy aide described various testimony by army witnesses as "mistaken" but refused to characterize it as "false."

Before Thursday's session had opened the sub-committee turned down, in effect, a request by Assistant Defence Secretary H. Struve Hensel that the transcript of its closed meeting May 17th be made public. Hensel, who has been dismissed as principal on the army side in the hearing, contends McCarthy acknowledged at that meeting that the charges involving him were baseless.

The sub-committee instead voted to supply a copy of the transcript — marked "confidential" — to all the committee members and principals. The betting at the press tables was that this transcript wouldn't remain confidential long.

Indo-China Case Comes Up At U. N. For First Time

By Francis W. Carpenter UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP) — The UN Security Council overrode Russian objections 10 to 1 Thursday and took up Thailand's plea for a peace patrol to check on the threat to Thailand resulting from the war in Indo-China.

This action brought the Indo-China conflict to the UN for the first time. At a meeting lasting only 62 minutes, Thailand's case was introduced by Pote Sarasin, Thai ambassador to Washington. He told the council the situation in the Indo-Chinese territories bordering Thailand posed a real danger of invasion of his country. He urged the council to send a peace observation committee to Thailand to observe and report to the international community.

Semyon K. Tsarapkin, Soviet delegate, said it was unnecessary for the council to debate the Thai appeal. He said everyone knew it referred to the war in Indo-China and the great powers were negotiating on that in Geneva. He said talks here would hamper the Geneva negotiations and added that the war was being brought before the UN because "certain aggressive circles of the United States" are preparing for American intervention in Indo-China.

His opposition indicated to some delegates the Russians likely would veto any resolution to send a peace observation group to Thailand. In that case, Thailand could appeal to the General Assembly, where there is no veto. After the vote, the council adjourned indefinitely so the delegates could get instructions from home on the next step.

U. S., Allies Moving Rapidly Towards Showdown On Southeast Asia Problem

By John M. Hightower WASHINGTON, (AP) — The United States and allied countries are moving rapidly toward a showdown over intervention in the conflict with communism in Southeast Asia. This will be a showdown inside the U. S. government—where counsels remain divided—as well as between the U. S. and other countries. Developments seen here are speeding a decision are these:

1. The British and French governments, which have been unwilling to make any firm decisions in view of the possibility of a ceasefire agreement at Geneva, now are reported to believe that the outcome of the Geneva negotiations can be known very shortly.

2. Top military men of Britain, the United States, France, Australia and New Zealand will meet here Thursday to see what kind of strategy might be employed to secure Southeast Asia against Communist domination in either of two events: Geneva agreement ending the fighting, in which case the strategy would be to support and preserve the truce, or a failure to end the fighting, which would mean that countries that have been talking about intervening would either have to act or shut up.

3. The victory of Prime Minister Robert G. Menzies' government in Australia is taken here to mean that the Australians now will be able to act more decisively than they could in the pre-election period. Official Washington understands that Menzies favors formation of a united front in Southeast Asia in the interest of Australian security, although neighboring New Zealand has evidenced little enthusiasm for doing anything without Britain.

4. The French government, shoring up its defences in Indo-China after the Communist victory over Dien Bien Phu, is arranging to bide a little time by regrouping available forces and possibly rushing some French reinforcements from Europe or North Africa.

The aim of this exercise is to try to stabilize the military situation while the diplomatic talks proceed. NEED U. S. HELP: But French officials have frankly told the U. S. government that if Geneva fails to produce a truce the United States will have to send in forces to help out or else the French will not be able to carry on the war.

Some officials here believe the Communists are so fearful that the Indo-China war will be greatly enlarged if it goes on that they will make a reasonable deal at Geneva. Others think they will insist on terms highly favorable to themselves and that the French in the long run may give in.

Despite all this, an American decision on intervention will have to be made in the fairly near future.
