OVERCOME YOUR HANDICAP
EVEN MAKE IT AN ASSET

It depends on you. You can overcome your handicap. Still more—you can turn the handicap into an asset.

Some of the world's most powerful orators started with a defect in their speech and in overcoming the defect, they developed powers that made them masters of men.

Some years ago we knew a strong man whose muscular powers astonished observers. He had started life as a delicate boy, but his parents, guided him in a course of physical culture which brought out unsuspected possibilities.

We remember a fellow-student who was notoriously weak in language study. But he took up Hebrew with the will to win, and became the best Hebraist in his class.

"You can never preach" was said to a student for the ministry. But he was held by his "call" and when settled in a small congregation, gave himself to teaching. Nothing finer than his work was ever done in that field.

There is no single rule that will apply to all cases. One's natural gifts, or lack of them, ordinarily determines the work to which his life should be given.

But sometimes appearances or the preferences of the public conceal latent powers that call for cultivation. The destiny of their possessor may depend on their discovery.

THE FIRST

Character is first among the conditions of success and our gifts secondary. The cultivation of our gifts depends on the will behind them.

The man himself is always more influential than anything he can say or do. The student thinks his future will be decided by what he learns; in reality, it depends on what he becomes.

Sometimes the man is obviously raised up for the situation. But it is hindsight rather than foresight which draws that conclusion.

We recall a local issue in which a great principle was involved. A man was dragged into it who saw at once the end to be gained and the means for gaining it, and whose passionate earnestness was the driving force behind all that was done.

Nothing seemed more unlikely to those who knew his past than that Abraham Lincoln should become the mastermind of a great crusade. Nothing in his earlier life had ever brought out the moral energy required.

But when the need arose, the man was there, and the demand brought out his powers.

This rarely happens dramatically. Usually we feel our way forward, entering this or that opening because there is no other way to go. Here events a man into a position where he must fight or quit.

As it isn't in him to show the white feather, he fights, and then "wakes up to find himself famous."

Or the man sees before him a cause that no one else will touch.

Most people follow the example of the one who refuses to have his fingers burned in that particular fire. But when living men and women are concerned, and someone will suffer if the wrong should prevail, some man or woman takes a stand and pays the price. True social progress follows such action.

THEIR OWN

Sometimes men make such a cause their own and freely throw themselves into it. There are strong and stable institutions in our city which owe their position and power to some business man who put his resources behind them.

What might have amounted to nothing but the dream of a visionary became a practical force because business experience and its products brought the idea into action.

"The stone which the builders rejected became the headstone of the corner."

There is a legend that when Solomon's temple was being built the builders found a stone for which there was no place. So it was cast aside and covered with rubbish, and forgotten.

Later, the builders found a place that they had no stone to fit, until they thought of the one they had cast aside. When they dug it up they found that it fitted with precision that place that had puzzled them.

Never accept the notion that you are a misfit because you have not yet found your place.

If you have unique gifts or qualities there is a unique function for them, and the God who gave them will guide you to the work He has fitted them to do.

The Great Designers makes no mistakes, and is ready to complete His undertaking in you and through you.
