He does not advertize to sell goods at cost, but he guarantees to sell from 10 to 25 per cent less than those who do ad-vertize to sell at cost.

He does not try to deceive the people by making a big blow and offering paltry rewards, but tries to do things right and has the goods to back him up in what he advertizes.

He has now about 6,500 HATS and $4,000 worth of CLOTHING, which he guarantees to sell from 10 to 25 per cent less than any house in the trade. A lot of this Clothing was bought less than half price, and will be sold less than half price.

He does not ask the people to believe his advertisement

The Mayor of Grand Rapids, Mich., last week issued an edict compelling the Salvation Army to refrain from public parades or suffer arrest. They disobeyed the injunction and were locked up—twenty in all. Great excitement prevailed for a time, thousands witnessing the arrest. The Mayor is determined to suppress the parades, and public sentiment is with him. The police station was crowded with sympathizers of the Salvationists, and the scene was quite dramatic when the prisoners kneeled and prayed for the judge, police, city officials, and the city at large.
"Amens" was heard from all quarters.

An Old Account of the Creation.

Dr. Augustus Le Plougeon, the indefatigable explorer of ancient American ruins, who with his wife has spent 12 years in the heart of the province of Yucatan, exploring those wonderful ruins that for ages have lain buried in the dense forests of the peninsula, has just given the reading world a new compilation of the results of his and Mrs. Le Plougeon's most valuable study of a now forgotten civilization. His new book bears the title "Sacred Mysteries Among the Mayas and the Quiches 15,500 Years Ago; Their Relation to the Sacred Mysteries of Egypt, Greece, Chaldea and India." The avowed object of Dr. Le Plougeon's book is to awaken in American students of archeology an interest in these ruins somewhat proportionate to that felt by European students in American antiquities.

Dr. Le Plougeon finds among the Mayax the counterpart of the story of the creation. In Mayax the primitive rulers received their titles from the shape or contour of their empires. The name Can (serpent) thus became the title of the Kings of Tartary and Burmah, who after death, as images on earth of deity, received the honors of apotheosis. A certain King Can, one of the earliest Mayax rulers, had five children, the family often represented by seven rattles in the tail of a great snake, symbol of the King himself.

It was the Mayax law that the youngest son of the royal family should marry the eldest daughter, in order to insure the legitimate and divine descent of the royal family. The youngest son of this family was Prince Coh, and the eldest daughter was Princess Moo. After the father's death Coh became King and Moo Queen of Chicheu. But Aac, the second son of King Can, was also in love with his sister. To him had been assigned the ancient metropolis of Uxmal. He was not a warrior, but a luxurious courtier, and envious of his younger brother's fame and of Moo's love for him. He, therefore, plotted against Prince Coh's life, and determined to have his Queen, and to become sole ruler of the empire. Finally Aac killed his brother treacherously with three spear thrusts, and proceeded to make love to his sister. As was the custom in offering her his hand, he sent messengers with a basket of fruit, her acceptance of which would indicate her acceptance of his suit. In a mural painting the scene is vividly portrayed, the Queen Moo is seen rejecting the messenger and the basket of fruit, while in a tree near by is seen a serpent looking intently at a mace on a branch near by, mace being the meaning of Moo, the Queen's name. "Here we have," says Dr. Le Plougeon, "the garden, the woman, the tempter and the fruit. The story of this family incident, passing from mouth to mouth, from generation to generation, from country to country, has become transfigured, probably by peoples who did not hold women in as high esteem, or did not honor her as much as the Mayas did. The biblical account of the murder of Abel by Cain, or of the fratricide in Ramayan, or the Egyptian papyrus, the doctor believes to be essentially the story of the feuds of King Can's children. This story, treasured by the priests of Egypt and India, preserved in their sacred books and poems, has been handed down to us among the primitive traditions of mankind. But, nowhere, except in Mayax, do we find it as forming part of the history of the nation. Nowhere except in Mayax do we find the portraits of the actors in tragedy. There we not only see their portraits carved in bas relief, on stone or wood, or their marble statues in the round, or represented in the mural paintings that adorn the walls of the funeral chamber built to the memory of the victim, but we discover the ornaments they wore, the weapons they used, nay more, the mortal remains." Both the funeral chamber and the sculptured tomb of Prince Coh were examined by the Le Plougeons, who finally disinterred his statue, and found in an urn his partly cremated heart, and the flint head of the spear with which he was slain, as the explorers believe, over 11,000 years ago.

The search for the body of Blair, the wealthy Montreal artist, whose canoe was found floating in Chalk River, has proved unfruitful. Foul play is now feared, as he had $600 in his possession at the time of his disappearance.

The tragedy at St. Sylvester, Quebec, was a terrible one. It occurred over a disputed piece of land, and Francis Foster literally cut Michael Keenan in two with a scythe. Foster is 77 years old, and this is the second time he has killed his man.

Mr. Tilden's beautiful city residence in Gramercy Park, New York, with its large collection of rare and carefully selected books, will become the property of the city of New York for use as a public library. The value of the building is $1,000,000.

The Concord School of Philosophy struck a snag in a paper forwarded by a Texas professor. It was called "The Platonic Idea," and after an earnest and hopeless search for the idea, the school returned the paper to the professor with the simple interrogation: "Why don't you sign the pledge?"

J. J. Catlin, yardmaster of the Pennsylvania railway, who was struck by a locomotive while attempting to save a young woman from death, about three weeks ago, has become insane. He imagines he killed the young lady, and that he is to be hanged for the crime. His wife is said to be dying from constant watching and nervous prostration.

The formation of an army corps of 48,000 men in Macedonia is due to the recent language of M. Tricoups regarding the Greek claims, and efforts of the Russian emissaries to ferment a rebellion in Macedonia, which efforts have been more active since the union of Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia thwarted the Russia propaganda in Bulgaria.

A few days ago a young woman named Lavinia Boal, of Sussex, N. B., performed a brave act, by means of which the life of a little child was saved. The child wandered from its home and was sitting between the rails on the I. C. R., near Sussex, when observed by Miss Bond. Just at the time she saw a train in sight rattling along. Without losing a moment she ran toward the child and snatched it off the track when the train was within a few yards of it. Miss Boal is loudly praised for her heroism.

On Saturday, 3,000 persons assembled at Queenstown, to bid good-bye to the delegates to the meeting of the Irish National League of America. Mr. O'Brien, in reply to an address, said he was going to confer with the greater Ireland across the ocean on the political situation. "Should coercion be attempted," he said, "Ireland would be ready to meet it undaunted." In the meantime headvised every Irishman to do his utmost to maintain peace, in order not to give a pretext for coercion. Mr. Redmond in his speech said nothing less than Gladstone's measure would satisfy Ireland.

The wife of Robert Fay, of Titusville, Pa., during a moment of temporary insanity, shot herself Thursday through the head. She had been married but a short time, and on Wednesday she expressed a wish to some of her friends that if ever she became insane they would not take her to an insane asylum. It was supposed to be a passing thought at that moment. Thursday she requested her mother to leave her alone for a short time to gain a little sleep, but the mother had been absent from the room less than five minutes when the pistol shot was heard, and wife and daughter were found lying across the foot of the bed with life extinct.

English reports are to the effect that Hon. Alexander Mackenzie's health has greatly improved.

"He Fell in Love With His Wife" is the title of the Rev. E. P. Roe's latest work. Of course it is fiction.

A Johnstown, Penn., woman has been sued by a neighbour for the theft of a pair of scissors valued at ten cents.

A rural Canadian recently hunted up a store in Montreal and paid the balance due on a purchase of shirts which he made in 1836.

A rattlesnake over nine feet long, carrying thirty-three rattles, was killed near Pikesville, Vanderburg county, Ind., the other day.

Sir Charles Dilke's name has been erased from the list of Privy Counsellors. Such an event, it is said, has not occurred since the last century.

An ex-minister named Reynolds, who undertook to preach heterodox doctrines in a tent at Boonton, N. J., was mobbed and driven out of town.

The Lowell Courier says: "Lieut. Henn has charge of the Galata, and its owners are cock sure that when the race comes off he can pullet through."

Major Macray, of New York, says he has found the exact spot where Capt. Kidd's treasure is buried near New York. He says it amounts to $7,000,000.

The Boston Evening Record says: "The word 'full' has come to have such a technical meaning that it makes one shudder to read that the Prohibitionists of a given State have nominated a full ticket."

CURRENT NOTES.

Nine hundred persons died at Santiago, Chili, of smallpox, in July.
