Medical Ass'n Sees Danger From X-Rays

TORONTO (CP)—The Canadian Medical Association Journal warns that abdominal X-rays at routine medical examinations may be causing death from leukemia.

The journal refers to a recent survey in Britain which estimated that, provided there was no "threshold effect," eight per cent of leukemia cases in Britain are caused by diagnostic X-rays and 84 by therapeutic X-rays.

The World Health Organization estimates that the average exposure to X-rays in North America is about seven times as great as that in Britain.

The CMA Journal says the findings of the British study indicates the proportion of leukemia cases induced by X-rays.

in North America may be higher than eight per cent.

Periodic health examinations by business executives, including X-rays to detect possible cancer of the stomach or bowels, were studied by cancer specialists in Britain. In 500 cases of myeloid leukemia studied there was "definite, measurable incidence of leukemia due to X-rays."

In Ontario between 1956 and 1960, about 18 in 100,000 men aged between 40 and 65 died of stomach neoplasms, or tumors.

The British figures suggest about 80 per cent of these cases could be saved if extreme care was taken before X-rays to ensure the risk of leukemia is negligible, the journal says.
