No. 4 Colliery Will Not Open

SYDNEY (CP) — Harold Gordon, chief of coal operations for the Dominion Steel and Coal Company, said Thursday No. 4 colliery at Springhill in which 39 miners died last November will not be reopened.

He indicated this earlier when he appeared before the royal commission investigating the Nov. 1 explosion which shattered the mine of the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company.

He said in a statement Thursday that because of "severe curtailment of orders from the CNR," neighboring No. 2 mine "can supply all future market requirements of coal from this area.

"In view ofthis and the very large expenditures of money required for the rehabilitation of No. 4 or a safe operation, the company has been reluctantly forced to the decision not to reopen the No. 4 colliery."

Some of the 250 miners who worked in No. 4 before the disaster have moved to No. 2, and others have given up the mines in favor of surface employment.

Heavy Storm In Three U.S. States

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) — Winds reached 97 miles an hour in a storm that roared through parts of South Dakota, Minnesota and Iowa Wednesday.

No casualties were reported in the wide area raked by the driving winds, but many farm buildings were blown down, trees uprooted and power and telephone lines tangled.

South Dakota farmers reported extensive damage to what promised to be a bumper small grain crop.

A severe wind and hail strom also cut a wide path through two central North Dakota counties, Wells and Foster, where some officials said crops were a total loss.

A county agent in Wells County, N.D., estimated crop and property damage at $2,500,000.

WILL VISIT RUSSIA

BELGRADE (Reuters)—A government spokesman said Friday that Yugoslav Vice-Presidents Edvard Kardelj and Aleksander Rankovic will make a "holiday trip" to Russia and that it was a "quite normal assumption" they would have meetings with Soviet leaders.

BEDTIME STORIES
Neighborhood Gossip

"Gossip's tongue alas, is loose,
For it there's no place or use.
—Old Mother Nature.

Where there are neighbors there is gossip. It always has been so. It always is so. It always will be so. No matter how carefully guarded, gossiping tongues will get loose. In every neighborhood it is that way and seemingly there is no help for it. So what is nobody's business but your own becomes everybody's business, and nobody really knows what they are talking about.

"Have you seen that new nest Goldie the Oriole and Mrs. Goldie have made up in the big elm tree?" asked Welcome Robin.

"Of course I have seen it. How could I help but see it? I guess everybody has seen it. What do you think of it?" replied Kitty the Catbird.

"What do you think of it?" replied Kitty the Catbird.

"I think making a nest like that is the craziest thing I have ever heard of," declared Welcome Robin.

Kitty the Catbird nodded in agreement, and said: "I hear it is all Mrs. Goldie's doing. What in the world she could have been thinking of I don't know. Most of the folks I know want their nests hidden as much as possible, but no one in the neighborhood can help seeing that nest."

It was true. That nest was a beautifully woven deep pocket hanging securely from the swaying tip of a branch of the big elm tree in Farmer Brown's dooryard. It was made wholly of white string. Usually the nest of the Goldies was of soft gray material, not easily seen beneath the overhanging and surrounding leaves. But this white nest gleamed in the sun and could be seen from a considerable distance. There was no one in the Old Orchard or the neighboring part of the Green Forest who had not seen that nest.

"If they lose their eggs or babies it will serve them right. They are asking for it," said Welcome Robin.

"Mrs. Goldie seems proud of it. She says there is no nest like it anywhere about," said Kitty the Catbird.

"Probably she is right about that but who wants a nest that everybody knows about. I'm sure I do not," spoke up Redwing the Black bird. Redwing likes to have his nest well hidden in a clump of rushes.

"Perhaps she is just trying to be different," said Mrs. Chippy the Chipping Sparrow.

"She is different all right, stupidly different if you ask me," said Welcome Robin.

"Nobody asked you," said a sharp voice. Unnoticed, Goldie had come near enough to overhear the gossip. "We don't care who knows where our nest is because it is the safest nest anywhere around here. What is more, it is one of the best and strongest nests we ever have had. If any one could get to it, harder than to tear open one of our usual nests." With an angry flirt of his tail Goldie flew over to get a which I doubt, they would have hard work to tear it open, much bit of doughnut at the feeding shelf in the dooryard and a drink of syrup from one of the little red cups of syrup put out especially for the Hummingbirds.

"I still think it was a crazy thing to do," declared Kitty the Catbird.

Meanwhile Mrs. Goldie was weaving into the nest another piece of string. Presently she settled down in the nest. The Merry Little Breezes came dancing along and set the nest to swinging gently. Let the neighbors gossip. Not one of them had a nest like this.

To Revise Canada's Policy Toward Eskimo Population

By DAVE MCINTOSH
Canadian Press Staff Writer

OTTAWA (CP) — The Progressive Conservative government plans to review the old Liberal administration's policy toward Canada's Eskimo population.

Generally speaking, the Liberal policy was aimed at introducing the Eskimo gradually to the 20th century so that he would eventually be able to fit into the white man's civilization

To this end, schools and houses are being built for Eskimos in Arctic hamlets. Northern service officers try to show them, without pushing, the advantages of community as opposed to nomadic life.

However, privately, some authorities on the Arctic argue that this policy is only destroying the Eskimo's self-reliance so that he will eventually become dependent almost entirely on the government.

They say that the Eskimo has always been able to look after himself, to adapt himself to new ways without coaching from white men. All the Eskimo's inherent ability to get along under the most difficult circumstances and to shift for himself were being submerged.

CRITICTZES TERM

One of the dissenting officials disputed the often-used phrase in the northern affairs department that the Eskimos are "stone-age" men.

He said this is nonsense. Two decades ago, when fur pieces were good, many Eskimos had modern motor boats and rifles and made a good living as hunters and trappers.

When the bottom fell out of the fur market, the government tried to find some new means of livelihood for the Eskimo without moving him out of his native environment.

The object might have been worthy, the dissenters say, but the method was wrong.

Instead, the Eskimos could have been brought south, especially the school-age ones. They could have been placed in schools in such places as Churchill, Man., and Goose Bay, Labrador, thus saving the large amounts of money for new schools in the Artic.

URGE INTEGRATION

In a generation, most of the Eskimo population could have been integrated into the Canadian scene. The United States was accomplishing such a policy in Alaska.

The officals who disagree with the former government's policy say there is much to be said for it from the standpoint that the Eskimo is not being suddenly overwhelmed by white civilization.

But the fact remained that the Eskimo soon would be greatly outnumbered by white even in the most remote areas of the Artic. The sooner he was integrated into the white population, the faster he could advance socially and economically.

Otherwise, he would only remain on the fringes of the white man's northern camps doing menial jobs and being held in unhappy suspension between one world he did not understand and another in which he had lost his old skills to survive.

Says No Plans For Jobs Shift

OTTAWA (CP)—The new Diefenbaker government has no plans for any mass switch in the positions of the approximately 180,000 persons who work at federal jobs, classified or unclassified, it was learned Thursday.

One informant said the Conservative government, which took office June 21, has not yet had time to consider any such possibility and has no plans to change the status quo.

However in the past the Progressive Conservatives have been critical of the rising cost of government and the size of the civil service could later become a target in any move to slice administrative expenses.

The civil service is made up of some 142,000 classified employees, mostly in white-collar office jobs, who come under the federal civil service commission. Unclassified and not within the control of the commission are some 40,000 positions, such as janitors, charwomen, laborers, dockyard and other hourly-rated workers. Most of these are filled by the public works department.

The informant said Works Minister Greene has already indicated none of these people will lose their jobs and when they quit or retire their places will be filled by persons acquired through the government's National Employment Service.

In addition there are some 12,000 rural mail carriers who work on a contract basis. Postmaster said that such contracts now in force will be honored until they expire and come up for renewal.

Only about 100 of the 322 islands in the Fiji group in the South Pacific are inhabited.

Urge Retention Of CPR Firemen On Locomotives

CALGARY (CP) —Prairie railway engineers showed a united front Wednesday in urging the retention of locomotive firemen on Canadian Pacific Railway yard and freight diesel engines.

Six representatives of Alberta and Saskatchewan engineers and one representative of a British Columbia group spoke before a one-day hearing of the Kellock royal commission on employment of fireman on CPR trains.

A yard foreman, trainman, conductor and nine firemen also addressed the hearing, which ended abruptly when all evidence was heard in one day. The commission had been scheduled to sit in Calgary for three days before going to Vancouver.

LEFT-SIDE GUARDIANS

The witnesses, all supporting retention of firemen, made these points:

1. Firemen are needed as a safety factor on the left side of a locomotive to help the right-side engineer avert injury or death to public persons or railway employees.

2. They are needed to maintain efficiency of railway operations in an age of increased speed and heavier loads.

3. The position of fireman provides necessary experience before a man is made engineer.

Counsel for the CPR, Ian Sinclair of Montreal, in his cross-examination of witnesses hammered at two questions-whether any train- accidents could have been averted by a more alert crew, excluding the fireman, and whether other members of a train crew, could have acted as "safety eyes" if a fireman were absent.

Opening lead—king of hearts.

Naturally, South ducked the heart lead. If West had continued with a heart there would have been nine easy tricks by the simple expedient of forcing out the ace of spades. But West shifted to the jack of diamonds.

There were still nine tricks available. But now they depended on guessing the location of the missing queen of clubs. It was the age-old problem—the two-way finesse.

It takes no great skill to make three club tricks with this combination if you know which defender has the queen. It takes a great amount of skill to consistently "guess" how to make three club tricks if you don't know the whereabouts of the queen.

Let's see how, in today's hand, South solved the problem. He allowed the jack of diamonds to hold the trick. West continued with a low diamohd and declarer won East's queen with the ace.

The king of spades was led. West took it with the ace and returned the ten of diamonds. Dummy's king won, the queen of spades was cashed, and another spade led to the ten, West discarding a heart.

The preliminaries were now over. South had assembled all the information he needed. The contract was certain to make. No longer was it necessary to locate the queen of clubs.

The eight of diamonds was led from dummy, declarer discarding a spade. West had to win the diamond with the nine. He was not in position to make a safe return. He had run out of spades and diamonds.

A heart return would be right into South's A-J. A club return would solve the problem of how to make three club tricks. Either return was bound to present declarer with his ninth trick.

In a sense, South can't be credited with having guessed which opponent held the missing queen. He performed the equivalent, though. By constructing an end position which allowed West no escape, South obviated all guesswork and reduced the "guess" to a certainty.
