Two Veteran Players Cleared Of Charges

By HAROLD MORRISON

LONDON (CP)—Two Veteran British bridge players were cleared of cheating charges recently after a year-long private inquiry that included testimony from Canadian and other experts.

The council of the British Bridge League, which received the report of the inquiry, declined to make it public but said a copy would be sent to the World Bridge Federation which originally had investigated the charges.

These involved Boris Schapiro, 54, and Terence Reese, 51, international bridge partners for the last 25 years. They had been accused of using finger signals during the world bridge championships in May, 1965, at Buenos Aires. Both had denied the charges.

Schapiro said he is relieved by the finding but disgusted with the whole business and would never participate in an international competition again.

Reese, who now is writing a book on the affair, told reporters he is not satisfied with the league's decision not to make the report public. He said he is considering libel suits against several publications which, he maintained, had printed "damaging and improper" material during the private hearing.

WILL CONTINUE PLAYING

Nevertheless, despite the attitude of some other international contestants during the investigation, he expected to continue to play some games.

The inquiry was conducted by Sir John Foster, retired barrister, and Gen. Lord Bourne, a retired military commander.

Witnesses included Sammy Kehela of Toronto, coach of the North American team.

The British Bridge League announced at the outset it would not act on the world federation's findings—never published—on grounds that two persons who gave evidence also had acted as judges and that Reese and Schapiro were not given sufficient opportunity for defence.

Reese, who makes his living from playing and writing about bridge, and Schapiro, a one-time meat wholesaler, were world champions in 1955.

Opening lead—king of clubs.

Most players bid naturally and frown upon systems or methods which stress gadget or other artificialities. By and large, when the average player today bids spades, he has spades; when he bids hearts, he has hearts; and so on.

But it cannot be denied that a handful of artificial ystems in use today are amazingly effective, and the Italian team, which in recent years has dominated the world of bridge, offers the best proof of this.

Thus, the Roman Club system played so successfully by Avarelli and Belladonna contains many artificial bids. The accompanying hand, in which they held the North-South cards, occurred in the match between Italy and North America in 1962. It illustrates how precise this pair can be in their bidding on certain types of hands.

There is much more meaning to the bidding shown than meets the eye. The club bid was artificial and forcing, but it could have been based on an entirely different and much weaker hand.

The two heart bid was natural, but in this sequence showed not only a game-forcing hand but at the same time requested partner to identify his heart strength and length.

The two notrump response showed two or three worthless hearts. Three diamonds was a further demand for North to identify his diamond holding, and North's pass, after West had doubled, denied first or second round control of diamonds.

This was all the information that Avarelli needed to eliminate all possibilities of a slam and he therefore jumped to four hearts, which everybody passed. He made five for a score of 450 points.

At the second table where an American pair held the North-South cards, the bidding—believe it or not—went:

The bidding:

South went down one.

OTTAWA (CP) — Mines Minister Jean-Luc Pepin has left Ottawa on a three-day visit to New Bruswick and Nova Scotia to discuss the possible development of tidal power with the provinces' premiers.

Mr. Pepin will meet the premiers Friday after a two-day tour of a number of possible power sites at the head of the Bay of Fundy.

Friday morning, he will meet New Brunswick Premier Louis Robichaud in Fredericton. In the afternoon he will call on Nova Scotia's Premier Robert Stanfield in Halifax.

He is accompanied by C. M. Isbister, deputy mines minister, and other department officials.

United States Has Proposal

GENEVA, Switzerland (Reuters) — The United States has proposed that the big nuclear powers should become contractors to the rest of the world, using peaceful nuclear explosions to move earth, dig canals and build dams.

At the same time, it called on the 17 - country disarmament conference to ban the spread of all nuclear explosives even if they are for peaceful purposes —to non-nuclear countries.

The U.S. said a peaceful nuclear explosive device could be easily adapted as a weapon. But the non-nuclear countries could still benefit from the use of peaceful devices in compensation for being barred from developing them themselves.

Chief Soviet negotiator Alexei Roshchin told correspondents afterward the American statement was a thorough, accurate and forceful presentation.

CARS AND PLANES MEET

Since the only road leading from Gibraltar into Spain crosses an airfield, a stoplight must control traffic between landings and take-offs.
