A Good Man Gone.

The death of James Lewis Hayden, Esq., of Vernon River, deserves more than a passing notice. By his death a good man has passed away—a Christian has gone to his reward.

The late Mr Hayden was the youngest child and the only son of James Hayden, Esq., who for many years in the olden time carried on shipbuilding, milling and mercantile at Vernon River. In his youth he followed the occupation of his father, and at the time did a very extensive business. After the decline of shipbuilding he gave his whole time to milling and farming.

He was a great sufferer at times from the illness that ended his life. A few days before he died he rallied and was able to walk around the house. Suddenly he complained of a pain in the chest. The doctor was sent for, and while at his bedside, without a struggle or groan, death "expressed his iron reign," and he passed through the door that opened into life.

Mr. Hayden was a conscientious and consistent member of the Methodist Church from his youth till his death. He adorned his profession. Death to him was gain—gain evermore. Death never conquers one that dies in the right. So there is no need of tears for him who triumphantly entered the higher life—a life unalloyed by pain and trouble, and to continue through the never-ending years.

In proportion to the width of the circle in which he moved, few men ever lived who were more esteemed and loved, and few ever died more regretted than the subject of this sketch. During his active life he had dealings with all classes of men, and his integrity, his honesty, his integrity and his insinuation. He never made an enemy, he never lost a friend. Honesty with him was like the oak around which all his other virtues clung. To him, then, were but two paths, the right and the wrong. He invariably chose the right.

He was a man of strong convictions, and he never hesitated to express them, but he did it in a way that offended no one. His generosity was magnificent. To do good was his aim. No appeal for charity ever left him empty-handed. He possessed a great sympathetic heart that beat in unison with the people and felt for the woes of the poor. But he gave without ostentation. He had no patience with pretensions—no love for display. Many of his charities will never be known until the record of the Recording Angel reads them aloud from the Book of God's remembrance.

Mr. Hayden's disposition was retiring—his modesty proverbial. More than once he was solicited by the people of his district to allow himself to be put forward for preferment and position. But he always declined, and in such an emphatic manner that further insistence was useless. He was as popular as he was retiring. Public confidence in his integrity was universal when he was known.

The writer of this sketch, who loved him as a father, finds it difficult to write what he knows to be the truth, without its appearing as extravagant panegyric. But he cannot close without bearing testimony to his even and loving character. He was affectionate at home and genial abroad. There was no austerity in his nature. The young loved him, for he always had a kind word when he met them. He loved their society, he enjoyed their hilarity. The present generation must pass away before the familiar and endearing name of "Uncle Jim"—a name by which he was known by hundreds who were in no wise related to him—shall be forgotten.

As the sun dies out of the sky, leaving a legacy of glory to the clouds, so James L. Hayden, passing from the earth, leaves the legacy of a good name, a high character and an unspotted reputation to those who survive.

The N. B. and P. E. I. Railway

TRAVEL NOT SO BRISK AS USUAL THIS YEAR

The New Brunswick and P. E. I. Railway, connecting with the I. C. R. at Sackville and terminating at Cape Tormentine, a distance of 30 miles, appears to be very economically and well managed by Mr. J. F. Allison. The road bed is very smooth, and the passenger accommodation superior to most branch roads. The employees are paid in full each month.

There is good service and frequent communication on this line. The rate to be paid for carrying last year about $5,000 above expenses. Large quantities of lumber, lumber, shingles, and stone, besides a large amount of local freight for merchants along the line is carried by this road. A special freight train was kept constantly employed last season from that of May to first of December, carrying lumber and stone from the Coburg quarries near Bas de Vert, for the pier now under construction at the Cape. On this line are the following stations, viz: Middle Sackville, Upper Sackville, Midgig, Brooklyn, Bas de Vert, Port Milgig, Hardy's Corner, Melrose, Oulton Road, Lane's quarries, and Cape Tormentine. Many of the villages are passed through by this line, and the whole distance has the appearance of being a very fertile and good agricultural soil. The passenger traffic is not as good this winter as usual, owing to the very open winter, which has had its effect in many ways, but principally on account of the ice boats not running as usual and travel to and from P. E. I. not going by this route—Moncton Times.

It RAINED OWLS—Says the Halifax Recorder of Saturday: A person who had been out at a wake, was coming along Dresden Row at 1:30 this morning, when his dog pursued and caught some object on the sidewalk. It was a small owl, which is now in a cage, alive. It is mentioned also that following the big storm of last Thursday night week, a number of small owls were found in the suburbs. Carnell, the carriage builder, got one on his premises; Dr. Bennett had two, and several others are reported. They are pretty birds, small, white-plumaged. Where did they come from?

Canadian Life Insurance.

An abstract of the operations of Canadian Life Insurance Companies during the year 1891 shows how rapidly the business has grown, more particularly during the last decade. The total amount of insurance in force by Canadian companies is now no less than $148,343,000, the average amount per policy being $1,500, and to clearly exhibit the extraordinary progression of the business the following figures are submitted:—

|                      | 1881.        | 1891.        |
|----------------------|--------------|--------------|
| Premiums.....        | $ 1,919,966 | $ 4,492,675 |
| Amount effected..... | 11,138,480   | 23,346,560   |
| Amount in force..... | 46,041,630   | 148,343,000  |

The premium income last year was half a million greater than in 1890, the exact figures being $464,000, while the amount of policies which became claims rose from $1,238,168 to $1,391,194.

Of the total amount of life insurance carried by Canadians, more than one half is in the hands of the home companies, while fifteen years ago our own institutions had less than one fourth of the whole business.

The volume of new business effected by the three most prominent Canadian companies for 1891 is as follows:—The Canadian Life issued 2,103 policies for $4,950,200; the Sun Life 2,245 policies for $4,012,517 and the Confederation, 1,926 policies for $3,004,096.

A Flock of Wingless Birds.

The Zoological Gardens have just been enriched by the arrival of a considerable flock of apteryx—that remarkable wingless bird from New Zealand—says a London Journal. They have been placed in the Cassin's house, which is, zoologically speaking, a very suitable place for them. The apteryx belongs to the same great family as the cassin's and emu. The apteryx used to be considered rather a rare bird; but it seems to be more commonly got now than formerly. Being so defenceless and small, it is remarkable that it should have persisted so long; but in New Zealand it had and has a fairly easy time of it, for there are no mammals in that country to hunt down and destroy the kiwi, and as it is accustomed in its habits, it does not fall a victim to hawks. Its colossal and extinct relative, the moa, was extirpated by the Maoris, who, fortunately for us, probably scorned such small game as the kiwi, in comparison to the great moa, which furnished them with meat, clothing and weapons.

News Notes.

Famine-stricken Russians are threatening to plunder land-owners.

The makeshift Tory Government is making the Liberals shift.

It is estimated that the cost of maintaining the some 100,000 inmates of the various penal institutions in the states exceeds $15,000,000 annually.

A ten-year old pupil in a public school at Lansing, Mich., drew a revolver from his pocket and threatened to shoot his teacher, who was chastising him. The revolver was taken from the boy before it was discharged. A canvass of the school revealed the fact that thirteen boys of tender age owned revolvers and were accustomed to carry them at different times.

No less than ten of the largest savings banks in Sydney, N. S. W., stopped payment during the last fortnight, and many of those remaining are likely to follow. These societies, only a few months ago, paid at their annual meetings, 12 to 25 per cent dividends to shareholders, but after a couple of days' run were unable to repay depositors. Many of whom are people in poor circumstances. The banks are in the hands of magistrates and ministers of the crown headed the lists as directors and shareholders.

We wish this slip was a sample of any one of the 155 patterns of embroidery. Stanley Bros are showing every lady a sampler could see at a glance. The value here is in the name.
