Washington

peace are unacceptable and undoubtedly will be rejected by the Western Powers.

Britain, the United States and France will begin consultation in a few days on the Soviet proposition, set forth in a note to the three powers Saturday.

Diplomats here said the Western powers would not fall into what apparently is a Russian propaganda trap.

Any four-power discussion of an approach to German peace-making must begin with practical steps toward unifying East and West Germany, it was emphasized, and not with a propaganda battle in which the Russians would seek to wreck the Western defence drive.

The Soviet note called for a meeting of representatives of the four governments by October to consider a German peace treaty, the formation of a government over all Germany, elections throughout Germany, and the date for withdrawal of occupation forces.

The Russians said in effect that after the peace treaty and an all-German government were discussed they would be glad to consider a Western proposal for setting up a commission to determine whether conditions exist in Germany for free elections.

Agreement by the Soviets to such a commission would seem to commit them to dismantle the Iron Curtain between East Germany and the West. Such agreement has therefore been considered highly improbable—except in the circumstance, unlikely at this time, that Russia is ready to make some tremendous concessions and adjustments in its world relationships.

At other times, emergencies such as the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease this spring have taken precedence even over the Throne-Speech debate.

However, a more complete break may be in the offing. It is understood that the government has laid down a deadline at which all legislation must be ready to go before Parliament.

This deadline is reported to be one month before Parliament assembles, scheduled for Nov. 20.

If the deadline is met, the full session might bring down its full legislative program a day or two after the Throne Speech is read by the Governor-General.

Another method of coping with the work in parliamentary business is to split the session, calling Parliament together in November. After an adjournment for Christmas and New Year's, members probably could wind up business by the end of May.

Parliament will follow that plan this year. The present session, adjourned since early July, will be prorogued Nov. 20 and a new session started the following day.

This procedure is being followed to allow members to get through their work in time to attend Queen Elizabeth's coronation in June.

However, it is understood that Prime Minister St. Laurent favors adopting this as a permanent practice.

T. L. C. Rejects

about the association with other labor groups were directed at the C.C.L. He said there was no complaint against the committee activities of the 90,000-member Catholic syndicates from Quebec or of the Railway Running - Trades Brotherhoods of about 40,000 members.

However, Jack Bruce of Toronto, Canadian chief of the Plumbers' Union, lashed out against the Quebec body.

He taxed the Catholic Confederation with raiding T.L.C. international union membership "with the aid of the clergy."

"We sat in conference with them, and they were betraying us," Bruce said.

Support for the idea of a closer working arrangement with other labor groups came from Orville Braaton, left-wing Vancouver representative of the Pulp and Sulphite Workers' Union.

"The only thing stopping labor unity in Canada is some sections of the leadership," he said. "The rank and file want it."
