

Employment Office To Make Cash Payments

Sometime before mid-December, the National Employment Office, in Charlottetown which at present pays all Unemployment Insurance benefits by warrant, will commence the payment of City claimants by cash.

For some years all the larger offices in Canada, including such offices in the Maritimes as Halifax, Sydney, Moncton and New Glasgow, have been using the cash system. Recently other Maritime towns including Charlottetown have also been authorized to pay cash.

Country claimants, because of distance from Charlottetown will continue to be paid by warrant. Warrants are mailed to rural residents every two weeks.

Cash payments will be paid not only to City residents, but also to those living close enough to the City, to report conveniently at the local Employment office when required.

The new procedure will result in some changes in the local office layout. A cashiers' cage, and a burglar-proof safe will be installed.

Only a sufficient amount of money to pay each day's claimants, will be kept on hand. Money will be drawn from a local bank each day as required.

The change in the method of payment will speed up the daily handling of claimants. It is possible under the new procedure to pay seventy-five or more claimants per hour.

There will be no increase in staff when the cash pay method is adopted, but some switching of duties will take place within the office personnel.

The staff is at present being schooled in the new procedure, by means of early morning training sessions, conducted from 8 a.m. to 8:30 a.m. daily. This training also includes the study of many amendments, made in general procedure in the past few months.

Staff training in all Unemployment Insurance offices in Canada never ceases, and except in rush periods is part of the daily routine.

Aerial Views Of North River Causeway

The fill-in of the North River Causeway which was started on August 23 by the contractors MacLennan and MacMillan continues to go forward well up to schedule. In the pictures (above) it will be noted that the fill has been widened out and raised high above the ultimate level, particularly at the peak, where the water still ebbs and flows. Both pictures also show the concentration of work on the West side where the twenty-foot spillway is shaping up. When this outlet is completed, a concentration of scrapers and other heavy road making machines will push the crown of the projections from each side and close the gap. The excess water above the causeway will then be diverted through the spillway.

who could understand the lab's equipment. In 1951, however, the Communists proclaimed the Jesuit school a government institution. Garneau said that when six other Canadian Jesuits were expelled from China last year, only he and Lafliche were left. They were summoned before the local political police, who took away their residence permits and told them to apply for exit permits.

"We simply said we would not ask to leave China, and we said that if the government wanted to punish us, let the government do so.

"Naturally, they (the political police) didn't like that. They didn't want the Chinese people to be able to say that the Communists were automatically expelling all foreigners. "Finally they told us, 'if you will not go yourselves, then the people will rise up and expel you.'"

HOUSE ARREST

He said he and Lafliche went back to the school and remained there for a year under house arrest.

Christman patriots came to see him and Lafliche and lured them into a big hall. "We pretty well knew what was coming. We started arguing and they got madder and madder when I told them they were a bunch of schematics and that their leader, Li Wei Quang, acting bishop of Nanking, had been excommunicated by Rome.

"Then they gave a signal and 50 who call themselves Catholics, but who have been excommunicated, invaded the hall, abusing us and making all the old accusations." The excommunicated Catholics yelled at the priests for 2 hours, then called on the government to expell the Canadians. Police, who were waiting outside, came in immediately.

"But it took the police 30 minutes to read a sentence which had all been prepared in advance,"

POTATO GROWERS The advocates of one-desk-selling suggest that in order to get Federal assistance in years of poor markets compulsory pooling must be maintained every year. The fact that, after hurricane Edna, the Nova Scotia apple producers were able to organize, voluntarily, overnight, and secure Federal aid proves that this argument does not hold water. One-desk-selling of P. E. I. potatoes can not benefit the grower in any way. In establishing it we risk losing many of our markets through the buyer's reluctance to deal with an autocratic, dictating agency. P. E. I. Potato and Turnip Dealers Association.
