Variety And Individuality Are Marking New Lamp Designs

BY EROL JANE WELTON
WOMEN'S EDITOR

Variety marks lamp designs, especially the new ones being shown now. Homemakers on the lookout for a new lamp will find that individuality keynotes the new designs, and there is more variety than ever before.

When you go shopping for a new lamp you won't find one clear-cut trend. This year they are stately, modern, traditional, symbolic. All types are represented in the collection of table, wall and floor lamps. Table lamps are all heights-up to giants of 52 inches. Most, however, measure from 28 to 24 inches.

WROUGHT IRON

There is much wrought iron being used, especially in long-stemmed floor lamps. They have been turned out in all shapes and sizes, incorporating the new ideas of many designers. A table lamp of wrought iron is a good investment, especially if the base has a receptacle for trailing ivy, cut flowers or potted cacti.

The traditional fine china bases with their dainty figurines are perfect in a "period" room. They are necessary accessory for a room of charm and dignity. The shades on these lamps are usually in soft, muted pastel tones or the deep blues and wines.

MODERN TREND

Modern lamps lead the field with their colorful shades and large bases, either chunky or molded into slim lines. Wood, metals, synthetic materials and china are used in the modern design. Glass, both clear and tinted is also cleverly used in various shapes and forms.

Desk lamps are still being shown with long goose-necks, but the shades have been revised to include the newest and most practical in color and design. Wall lamps too, most with wooden bases, are still in vogue.

Revival of interest in Early American has brought back the coach lantern as a decoration theme. It comes in table and floor lamps as well as in outdoor lighting units. Hurricane-type lamps are also proving popular in non-tarnish brass and gold finishes.

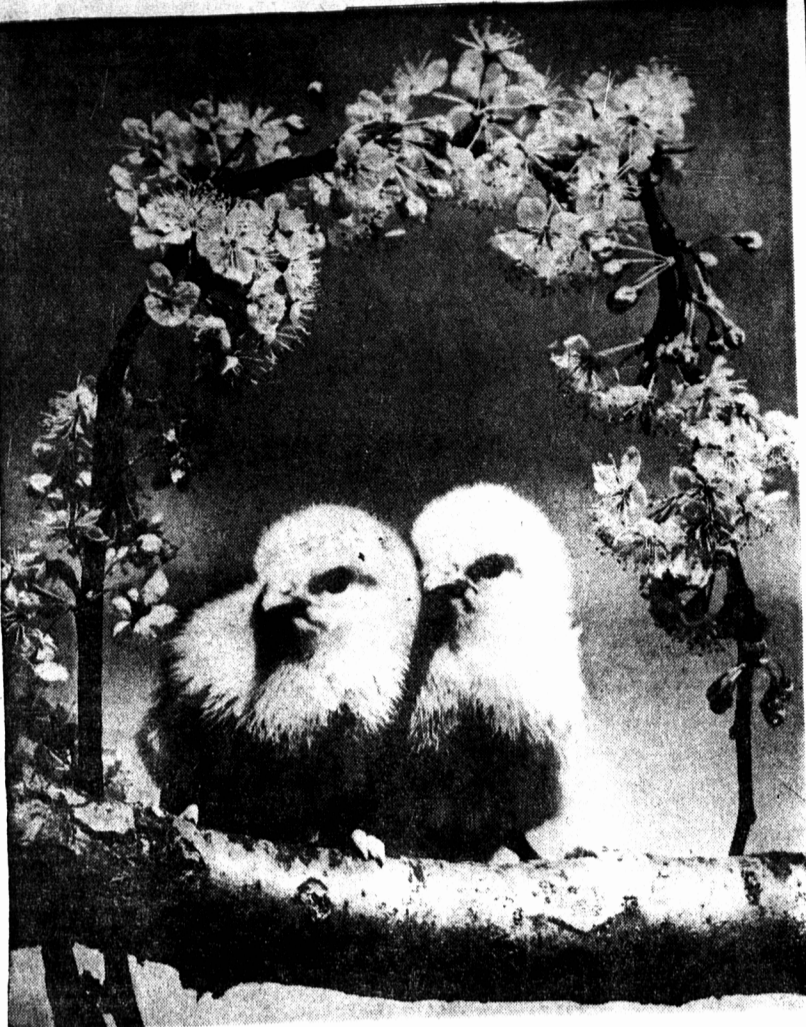

PRETTY SHADES

Lamp shades, like fashions, are both pretty and practical this spring. Satins and taffetas are being shown for formal lamp shades, chintz shades are gay and colorful when contrasted with a background of solid colors. Parchment shades are seen complimenting different types of bases. Modern shades come in all shades, designs and colors so the modern homemaker will find that choosing a new lamp or a new shade will be an exciting and worthwhile venture this spring.

Mrs. Ronald W. Woodgate, left, models a lime green tweed suit with white fleck. The slim skirt is styled with slit in front and a double pleat at the back. The lapel of her box jacket is enhanced by a spring flower. Completing her ensemble are brown shoes and purse with a turban-styled light straw hat. Miss Doris Hillion, right, wears a tweed suit too, this time in Parisian brown, with jacket tabbed in back and front to add a soft line. Her lime green scarf and gloves contrast with the dark brown of her rice straw beret, shoes and bag.

Grace Kelly To Have Many Titles After April Wedding

By CYNTHIA LOWRY
Associated Press Staff Writer

When Rainier III weds Grace Kelly, she will become the wife of the sovereign prince of Monaco. Not only that, she will fall heir to the feminine versions of more than a score of other titles.

For Rainier is also the Prince of Chateau-Porcien; the Duke of Valentinois, Duke of Estouteville, Duke of Mazarin, Duke of Marquis de Cilly; the Count of Carladec; of Torigni, of Perrette, of Belfort; of Thann, of Rosemont, of Longjumeau, and of Guiscard; the Baron of Saint-Low, of Buis, of the Luthumiere, of Altkirch, and of Massy; the Seigneur of Saint Remy and of Isenheim; and the Sire of Matignon.

The double ceremony, a civil marriage in the throne room on April 18 and the Roman Catholic rites and nuptial mass the next day, is required by law separating the functions of church and state.

Together they will make her Serene Highness Gracia Patricia one of the most titled women in Europe: twice a princess, four times a duchess, twice a marquise, eight times a countess, five times a baroness.

It is slightly paradoxical that Rainier, one of the few remaining monarchs with a throne, should reign over the smallest state in the world.

PENCHANT FOR PRANKS

It is also curious that, with a vast assortment of names to choose among, his serene highness signed up as "Mr. C. Monte," for his recent plane trip from Hollywood to a New York. He laughed it off as a "prank to newspaper men who soon found out that Mr. C. (for Carlo) Monte was in fact the world's most publicized bridegroom.

Although he has a penchant for such pranks, Rainier-Louis Henri Maxence Bertrand Grimaldi measures up pretty well to the average man's idea of a good guy. He's an automobile bug and likes to fool around with motors. On at least two occasions he prince has scared the wits out of Monaco's 21,000 residents by wrapping himself and automobile around trees.

Apparently he had a somewhat lonely and rootless childhood. The Grimaldis, as a dynasty, are noted for their shrewdly political marriages. Many of them, however, wound up in annulment and divorce.

His grandfather, Louis II, whom he succeeded to the throne in 1949, was a gay blade who didn't marry until he was 75, when he took as his bride a 46-year-old actress. But earlier he had a daughter by a woman named Louvet. When the daughter was 21, Louis made her Princess Charlotte, Duchess of Valentinois, and she married Count Pierre de Polignac who—following Monaco royal custom—adopted the Grimaldi name.

The couple had two children, Antoinette, three years Rainier's senior, and the prince. They later were divorced. Both Antoinette, now divorced from a Monaco tennis professional, and her mother renounced their rights to the succession.

STUDIED GOVERNMENT

Rainier, born in Monaco May 31, 1923, spent his early childhood in his grandfather's palace atop the ancient rock of the Grimaldis overlooking the Mediterranean and at his father's chateau in France. At 11 he was packed off to a boy's school, Summerfield, in Sussex, England, and then went on to Stowe.

He later went to schools in Lausanne, Switzerland, and Montpellier, France, topping off his formal education with studies in government in the School of Political Sciences in Paris.

The young prince served with France's 2nd Army Corps in Alsace during the closing days of the war.

EASTER SHOW
This is the time of the year when girls get fashion-conscious, regardless of age. And here, Debbie Meraglia, two, of Philadelphia, is shown making up her mind what to wear in the Easter parade—if mother doesn't take back her hats. At top, she seems pleased with herself and the head-hugging bonnet. At bottom, Debbie adds a bit of lipstick after donning a wide-brimmed flowered model.

ELLEN'S DIARY Precious Easter Is Here

So spring is here on the calendar and in the signs and tokens about. March brought it in gift, a souvenir of her changeful stay. At Adierca we have neither sight nor sound of any robin yet, and the snowdrops are still covered by a drift of snow. But these days the alder catkins and birch dust the white with the gilt of the season.

"Like it!" one of the family echoed our query today. "Is there anyone who doesn't like the spring?" No, we fancy. It finds a warm welcome in the depths of my every heart.

"I heard a meadowlark today!" My neighbor pead away while to say. I thought her quite immune to beauty.

Bound hand and foot to daily duty. God's way of paging each new spring.

Has grace to make a cold heart sing.

It veiled the far hills with its dreamy haze today and bared fields and set streamlets chuckling as they, in bits and pieces, bore winter's relics away.

"If spring came only once in a decade, we would watch in awe and wonder the unfolding of a maple leaf and the golden miracle of a dandelion," a writer says. "We would celebrate the blossoming of a dogwood tree and we would hold holiday when buttercups dapple the fresh green meadow. We would make pilgrimages down our country lanes when the wood thrush sings his spring song, the long-stemmed violets make a purple haze in the bogland, and the sky seen through fresh-leaved oaks is the color of a small girl's wondering eyes."

"Spring is the youth of creation, and it comes striding north across the land with a lilt in its voice and apple blossoms in its hair. We wake one morning with the new and see that Spring is here, new as genesis."

"Overnight, it has come up the valleys and over the hills, along the woods' roads and the byways."

And another week of our life has gone "down the river of time." It spent the days pleasantly in-it seemed-a dawn and a dusk, in moonlight and starshine, in the peace and loveliness of the March in Island places, in the Marching to bring the precious Eastertide here.

"I too, O Christ denied you. And felt the dawn-winds blow Cold and gray upon my cheek, and heard the cock's loud crow: I too, sat silent while the scribes With cynic wisdom tried to mock, and buffeted, reviled, and mocked, and buffeted you-crucified. But I have seen the dead arise. The spring wake fair and strong: And doubt has changed to soaring faith. Despair to love and song."

Until Monday — — — Diary — Good-night.

Warnholtz-Theobald Wedding Vows At Summerside Chapel

Lighted tapers flanked by daffodils and fern formed the setting at Glad Tidings Chapel, Summerside, on March 3 at 4 o'clock for the marriage of Charlotte Wells Theobald, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Wells, Summerside, and Mr. Gordon John Warnholtz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Warnholtz, Hespeler, Ontario.

The double-ring ceremony was performed by the bride's father. During the ceremony, Mrs. Alan Weber and Mrs. Bruce Ramsay sang "A Marriage Prayer." During the signing of the register they sang "O Perfect Love." Mr. Gordon Mackenzie played the wedding music.

Given in marriage by her brother, Mr. David Wells, the bride wore a floor-length gown of aqua taffeta with matching headress and gloves. Miss Helen Wall, maid of honor, wore a floor-length gown of pink tulle with matching head-dress and gloves. Each carried nosegays of Sweetheart roses and carnations.

Mr. Fred Warnholtz, Magog, Quebec, was groomsmen. The ushers were Mr. Alan Weber and Mr. Ernest Heckbert.

A reception followed at the ceremony at the new home of the bride and groom on Upper Summer Street. The mother of the bride chose a grey wool dress with pink accessories and a corsage of matching carnations.

Decorating the bride's table was a three-tiered wedding cake topped with a miniature bride and groom, tapers in silver candelabra and tulips.

Mrs. Fred Warnholtz was in charge of the guest book. Mrs. Rhoda MacKenzie presided at the tea table which had a lace cloth and tapers. Assisting in serving were Miss Marjorie MacFarlane, R.N., Mrs. Alan Weber and Mrs. Bruce Ramsay. Mr. Fred Warnholtz was in charge of the guest book.

DiETING Is Only Way That Excess Pounds Can Be Lost

By OLI DAUM
Canadian Press Staff Writer

TORONTO (CP)—Women who have been overeating to their heart's content, thinking exercise later will trim off excess poundage, had better curb their appetites.

Auburn-haired Marilyn McVey, whose shapely 36-26-37 is an inspiration to those she instructs here at the YWCA's keep fit classes, says it won't work.

"Let's face it—exercise is not a practical way to reduce," she said in an interview. "To lose one pound a person would have to climb about 5,000 steps or perform some equally strenuous task and we know she never would. The only way to lose weight is to consume fewer calories."

EXERCISE FOR HEALTH

But without proper exercise a woman can't have a beautiful body. Without it, muscles become lax, flabby and bulky. Even a slim woman needs exercise to stimulate circulation which will give the skin a sheen.

The main purpose of exercise is to maintain good health, it can distribute weight into desirable proportions and also, it can help a woman keep her age a secret, said Miss McVey.

"I call an overweight woman's approximate age by noting where she bulges," said 23-year-old Miss McVey. "On young girls fat collects around the waist and thighs; on older women, around the chest, shoulder blades and hands. To get rid of little-tale pounds around hips and waistline, Miss McVey suggests this exercise: Lie on back with arms stretched out at shoulder height and palms down. Raise left leg straight up. Keeping leg straight and hands on floor, turn hips and move leg to touch the floor at the right. Return to first position and lower legs."
