Mr. Wallace MacDonald, Dundas, returned home from the York University, after being a patient there for some time. He has resumed his studies as teacher at the Little Pond School.

MR. AND MRS. RICHARD E. FARMER

Wedding Of Interest To Island Friends Is Solemnized In Que.

The marriage of Winifred Jane Shetler, daughter of Mr. Leonard Shetler of Montreal, Que., and the late Mrs. Shetler to Flying Officer Richard Roscoe Farmer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Farmer of Barbados, West Indies, took place on Saturday, September 22, in Mount Royal United Church in Montreal. Rev. Arthur Organ officiated at the ceremony. He was assisted by Rev. J.A. Streckenfield.

The wedding music was provided by Mr. Montague Mat and bouquets of white gladioli, shasta daisies and mums; and white tapers in candleholders decorated the church.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a floor-length gown of white silk organza, fashioned with a bodice of alençon lace, having a scooped neckline. The bouffant skirt was softly draped over the hips and featured a lace-edged panel falling into a chapel train. Her waist length veil of tulle illusion was held in place by a large corsage and she carried a bouquet of pale yellow roses and stephanotis.

Miss Miriam Hyde, as maid of honor, and Miss Ann Land as bridesmaid, were in gowns of peacock blue peau de soie and lace with matching head dresses. They carried bouquets of white shasta daisies.

CHAIRMAN

Mrs. Alex Wilson, 157 North River Road, Charlottetown, has been named to lead the provincial "Shell-out" for UNICEF campaign, which will get underway later this month. Mrs. Wilson will be working to organize various youth groups, in the 8 to 15-year-old age bracket, to collect for UNICEF on Halloween night or to sponsor Halloween parties for this purpose.

Any groups wishing to participate in the campaign are asked to contact Mrs. Wilson early so that they may be given the title of materials needed for the campaign. Last year Canadian children collected over $200,000 for UNICEF in "Shell-out" campaign. The amount island children have collected has increased over 300 per cent since the campaign was started here in 1959.

MARY HAWORTH
Husband And Wife Love Sometimes Turns To Hate

Dear Mary Haworth: I have read with interest your answer to the boy, 16, who longs to go away with his kindly dad to live in peace, apart from his selfish domineering mother.

I would like to express my thoughts on this case. First, I understand the boy's feelings, because he is the real victim (as the children always are.) And yet I have sympathy for the mother, perhaps because I am something like her.

I don't agree with your words, that she is "singularly lacking in knowledge, perception, taste and judgment in respect to her man love... so far short of mature understanding on this score as to be an emotional moron." However, it might be true in some cases.

Possibly she, like me, in younger years, had great ability to love—even poor, stray homeless animals. Maybe she cried over poorly clad children in winter. Perhaps she was a good wife, at least for some ways; none of us is perfect.

Maybe her husband took her for granted, coming home to a shabby house and tasty meals, never taking her out, though giving her money to buy things, thinking that was enough, that she should be satisfied. Because he wants a good living, as he ought to be, at least that makes him a good husband.

Finally, as you get older, your once good and loving disposition turns to hate; yes, hate! Why don't we leave? Well, because we have no grounds for divorce, even though our mates would be gladly to rid us. But who suffers? We do. We aren't prepared to earn a living, so we continue in the same old grind—

Dear J.J.: In the language of psychiatry, you are rationalizing. You are holding your hapless husband to blame for the sense of failure that weighs on you, as you compare the life you have to the vision you had, of what you meant to be and do and possess.

You feel as if you've "had it"—your chance at the prize, and missed out. You feel oldish, bright, obscure, unwanted, not needed, unfulfilled, soured by bitterness (which you call hate). And all because your personal history didn't unfold as you had expected or hoped it would, in your juvenile day dreams—which apparently you carried over into marriage, to handicap and mislead you in dealing with reality.

You try to persuade yourself, looking back, that if your husband had been different, you'd be a vastly different person too. But I doubt it. "Great, oaks from little acorns grow," a maxim says. And by the same token "you can't make a silk purse of a sow's ear."

We are what we are, more or less, from the cradle to the grave. It isn't so much what happens to us, as how we create it, that forms the character we become, in the long run.

The values we have, the substance of our thinking, our industry, application or negligence in respect to developing the great potentials inherent in human nature—of which every individual has a birthright portion—these selfhood factors are tested and recorded in the crucible of living, the so-called daily grind.

Perhaps it's not too late to do better in your situation. In the July 28-August 4 issue of the Saturday Evening Post, read "Million and Margaret Silverman's article "Psychiatry Inside the Family Circle," which may inspire you to get special help in pioneering a breakthrough from moody hate to hopeful growth, in the afternoon of your life—

ELLEN'S DIARY

"You Never Miss Water Until The Well Runs Dry"

Last night it was, when we were about to wind the old clock on the shelf and seek our rest beside James, the farmer from the house across the lane came by for a moment to chat... to talk of the progress of the weeding, and how some fields are so damp from the overabundance of moisture, there are spots that would mire the machines; of the days' drawing in and that "it would be best where a muskrat paddled upstream to get a thing for a little like Alex to see. "It's a muskrat!" he whispered.

"Oh!" he said, obviously awed by the sight.

"When he comes near, toss in the pebble you have in your hand, and see what happens."

"I'll try it."

"I should, by rights take a steady look at your brain, I think... I'll just... stay... here... and sleep."

"Until tomorrow... — Diary — Good-night...."

SHIP TOWED IN
 ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP)—The disabled St. Pierre trawler Colborne was towed here Wednesday by the Grand Bank, Nfld., trawler Lockmees. The Colborne was from the French islands of St. Pierre et Miquelon off Newfoundland's south coast. Weathered and in trouble while fishing on the Grand Banks south of Newfoundland. She will undergo engine repairs.

RESERVES FALL
 LONDON (Reuters)—Britain's gold and currency reserves fell by $20,000,000 to $20,000,000, the treasury announced Tuesday. They dropped to $20,000,000 from $20,000,000, their lowest level since July 1961, when they were $27,000,000. A disappointing harvest-day,
