BUTTER TART QUEENS

The Queen of Hearts she made some tarts... and they couldn't have been yummier than those concocted by the butter tart champions of P.E.I. Special prizes were offered this year by the Canadian Dairy Foods Service Bureau of Canada for entries in this Women's Institute sponsored competition at Old Home Week. Above, Lincoln Dewar, bureau chairman, presents checks to the three women holding their prize-winning entries. Left to right are Mrs. Robert Carter, North Milton, Mrs. George MacMillan, 11 Beasley Ave., and Mrs. Ralph Younker, Kingston.

Frozen Tomato Juice Intrigues With Flavor

IT WAS SOME years ago that a frozen fruit salad and its potentialities were called to my attention by Mrs. William Randolph Hearst, Senior, who had enjoyed it at a nuptial buffet as a combined salad and dessert. "I'll be grateful if you can work out the recipe," she added, briefly word - sketching it.

Satisfactory Recipe

Soon I worked out a satisfactory recipe. It was so intriguing that I continued to experiment until I had a bevy of fine frozen salads which could be served as hors d'oeuvres, entrees, in salad courses, or as salad - dessert combinations.

Few of these were released, as I felt they would not have popular appeal.

But a recent visit as a guest of Dick Pope at Cypress Gardens in Florida changed my mind. I met my frozen fruit salad at lunch, one of the most popular foods served.

So today — carrying on the theme of cooking with cold that the Chef and I columned earlier this week — we present a recipe not only for the frozen fruit salad but for the following Frozen Tomato Mousse Salad of intriguing flavor.

Measurements level; recipes for 6

FROZEN TOMATO MOUSSE SALAD

(Present as a guest luncheon as an hors d'oeuvre salad; or main course; or as a salad course at a dinner party)

1½ c. juicy canned tomato, sieved
1 slice peeled onion
½ bayleaf
½ tsp. salt
½ tsp. cider vinegar
½ tsp. celery seed
1 tsp. Angostura bitters or
3 cloves.
2 tsp. unflavored gelatin
2 tbsp. cold water or tomato juice
1½ c. heavy cream, whipped stiff
3 c. shredded lettuce or cress
Marinated spiced tomatoes, cucumbers and celery (already columned)

Combine sieved tomato (pulp and juice), onion and seasonings; simmer until reduced 1-3. Rub through fine sieve. Add gelatin to cold water. Add to pulp; cool. Fold in whipped cream.

Rinse freezer tray from refrigerator with cold water. Spoon in tomato mousse mixture. Freeze at lowest temperature about 2½ hrs. or until firm enough to cut into squares. Stir twice, at the end of 15 and 30 min.

Serve individually on bed of shredded lettuce or cress. Garnish: marinated spiced tomatoes, cucumber and celery.

Accompaniment: cheese straws.

FROZEN FRUIT SALAD

(Enjoy as the main course at a ladies' luncheon or supper; or as a combined salad and sweet at a dinner party)

1 tsp. unflavored gelatin
1 tbsp. cold water or orange juice
1 c. mild - seasoned mayonnaise
1½ c. heavy cream, whipped stiff
2-3 c. drained canned crushed pineapple, scalded and cooled
¾ c. each halved hulled firm ripe strawberries, peeled seeded halved Tokay grapes, halved peeled Thompson seedless grapes, and diced firm orange pulp
½ c. minced well - drained maraschino cherries
Shredded candied figs

Stir gelatin into cold water; melt over hot water. Stir in mayonnaise. Fold into whipped cream.

Stir in fruits. Transfer to freezer tray that has first been rinsed with cold water. Freeze steadily at lowest temperature until firm, about 2 hrs. Stir once at end of 15 min., again at end of 30 min.

Slice; serve with a garnish of delicate lettuce hearts and colorful fresh fruits dressed with honeyed fruit dressing.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Haylands Are Shorn And Summer Is Gone

In an enjoyable piece of preserving, we canned cherries this morning. And thereby marked the flight of the summery days. The strawberry season had its green, full fields. There were robins' trills then, and thrushes' songs in the woodlands. Now haylands are shorn. The brownish tint of ripened "over - grass" has crept into the pastures. The robins are almost silent, and the swallows sit in a solemn row on high wires, hereabout. And it is with a sigh, because each remaining one is so precious, we tell off the summery days.

Time was, we recalled, as we sterilized the tins and made the syrup to cover the fruit, that the cherry preserving happened to coincide with the haying. Maybe that was in a year when, with the odd robin sharing, we gathered the fruit from the little plantation of trees growing down at the foot of the garden. Now lacking those, we must await the market's baskets. In any event, on a day gone, as we pitted cherries and measured the required amount of sugar to preserve them, we could see James mowing in the front meadow, then bounded at the lower side by the placid waters of the now lost millpond; could hear too that once familiar sound: the machine's brief halt, and creak of the turning at the corners, and James' voice encouraging the team. And then, as now, we owned to some regret that mowings had to be, coming to despoil the fresh green loveliness of the fields, and hasten the summer's passing.

"May I have some?" Peter, more or less at loose ends with Alex away, begged, come by when we opened the basket. "And" he added, extending another young hand, "some for Grandaddy too!"

James had been mowing the few and fine specimens of Scotch Thistle, brave in their royal shade of blossoms, growing down by the stream, forgetful, we fancied, of that day in history when one had saved the day — or night, for our forebears! Now he had put by a scythe, and with the axe at the chopping block by the woodshed, was making kindling from aged pieces of spruce — "cat - sticks" indeed, to spread a pretty fragrance in the burning and hurry the housewives' fires. He is the best one to see to the small helpful chores without, that need doing, always too has a liking to tidy the place; and to maintain a neatness about.

Another of our district whose willing hands ever glorified the humble doings of the home was tenderly borne this afternoon, to that rest of mortals to which sooner or later all come. She was a gentlewoman. Modest, unassuming, a housewife, mother and grandmother, we much doubt if any woman could be better esteemed and loved for herself than was this little lady folks mourn. To come by her door was to be assured of a warm welcome... "Wasn't I just thinking of you, this very day!" she would smile. Sad she would be, over the loss of loved one or friend; but she was never one to complain over the extremely busy life, or the ordinary duties of the household that was hers. Her capable hands and kindly mind found a satisfaction in ministering to others in that home, to which through the years many a one came — and went, blessed by the kindness of the woman. Ripe in years she went, but missed she will be. Still her memory will be kept evergreen by her bereaved family and kin, by the neighbors and the legion of friends that were hers. May we reflect that daily acts of kindness rather than in performing great deeds, that such saints are made!

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good - night.....

Double Ring Ceremony Performed At Miscouche

The altar of St. John the Baptist Church, Miscouche was adorned with baskets of red and white carnations for the July 25 wedding of Thelma Louise DesRoches, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adrian DesRoches, Miscouche, and Francis Reynold Gillis, son of Mrs. Carlotte Gillis of Kildare and the late Albert Gillis.

The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. J. D. Kelly. Mrs. P.C. Martin accompanied a choir of school girls who sang "Mother, At Your Feet Is Kneeling," "Ave Maria" and "O Lord, I Am Not Worthy".

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was wearing a traditional full - skirted gown of chiffon over taffeta. Rhinestones and pearls studded the bodice which featured long filly - point sleeves, and a decorative fabric rose as back interest. A halo of rhinestones held her four tiered shoulder length veil. She carries sweetheart roses.

Norma DesRoches, as maid of honor for her sister, was wearing a street length dress of pink nylon over taffeta, white accessories and bouquet of carnations and red rose buds. Louise DesRoches as bridesmaid for her sister was similarly dressed in blue with carnations and yellow rose buds comprising her bouquet. They wore veiled pill-box headdresses.

Bernard Gillis of Kildare attended his brother and Arnold of Alberton, another brother ushered, as did also Reginald Arsenault of Tignish.

At the reception at Miscouche Legion Home, the bride's mother received wearing blue lace over taffeta, white accessories and carnation corsage.

Mrs. Gillis chose a three-piece mauve linen ensemble, white accessories and carnations.

Honeymooning in the Maritimes, the bride wore for travelling a suit of embossed beigaline with white accessories.

Mr. and Mrs. Gillis are residing in Miscouche.

Our of town guests were Mrs. Gerald Gillis of Toronto, Linda Arsenault of Charlottetown and Mr. and Mrs. Tilmon Gallant, Rustico.

MARY HAWORTH

Brother-In-Law's Affair Disturbs Office Worker

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My sister's husband is having an affair with another woman. They both work where I do. I have known about this for over a year.

I had been hoping it would blow over (or come to an end) and my sister need never know. But instead it seems to be getting worse. Their attention is on each other all the time: talking and laughing together at work. Most days they arrive together and go off together after working hours.

He is in his fifties; she is in her thirties.

My sister has three small children. The youngest just started to school this year. They just bought a new house.

Should I go on choking this down? If not, how can I put my sister wise without letting her know where the word came from? I feel sure she wouldn't believe he goes with another woman even if she saw it with her own eyes.

What effect would this have on the children's lives? What would (or will) happen if this continues? Or if and when my sister finds out? Please let me know what you think I should do.—S.R.

DEAR S.R.: If your sister is happy in her marriage and trustful of her husband, it would be a crime of violence against her peace of mind and emotional balance (a crime that would be almost the moral equivalent of murder) to undertake to open her eyes to her husband's dalliance.

If, as and when her domestic security is seriously endangered by the affair (if such it is), her husband will be the person who breaks the news to her.

So long as he sees fit to say nothing to her about the other woman, or, at any rate, nothing to indicate that he is playing around in a two-timing spirit, this signifies that he still feels strongly anchored to his marriage and committed to his family, and that fundamentally he prefers it that way.

In all probability he rates the affair (if he bothers to try to assess its comparative importance) as simply a sideline excitement, adventure-for - free, otherwise meaningless, that he pursues not so much because the woman is irresistible, as because she is making the pitch and is slated (he thinks) to pay the piper if a bill is presented.

As your brother-in-law is in his fifties, and his wife is the mother of young children, and the pair are just buying a house, I take it that she (like his inamorata) is much younger than he; and that he married her in his middle age.

I would surmise, further, that he may have been married before, and that the probably has been, for a very long time, a self-indulgent, inconstant character in relation to women, so that his current dalliance is merely a continuation of his established pattern.

It just so happens, I think, that you have a front-row seat in watching him play out his usual game of careless double dealing, during which performance his affections are centered more upon himself than upon "the other woman," no doubt.

Now as to what you should do: If you are up in arms about what you see, why don't you challenge your brother-in-law and the woman directly, with your blazing disapproval of their flagrant flirtation under your nose?

They may say it is none of your business, and you may reply that the welfare of your small nieces and-or nephews (as the case may be) becomes your business, if they insist upon playing fast-and-loose with those children's rights to family security.

In any event, whatever you do, don't "tattle-tell" to the mother about what goes on.

H.M.

Senator Quart Will Be Speaker

SENATOR QUART, MBE

Special speaker at the Wednesday afternoon session of the 44th National Convention of the Catholic Women's League to be held at St. Dunstan's Basilica Recreation Centre in Charlottetown August 23rd.- 28th., will be Senator Josie D. Quart of Quebec City.

Senator Quart has chosen as her subject "Impressions of a Woman Senator", and she will also stress the necessity of women's greater participation in public affairs.

Born and educated in quebec City, Senator Quart is a fourth generation Canadian, and her life has been an unending diary of voluntary labour in peace and war. She has given long and loyal service in various associations on the national, provincial and local levels dealing with patriotic, civic, political, educational, social and charitable works.

Before being appointed to the Senate on November 17th., 1960, Senator Quart served as a representative on the Canadian Delegation to the 12th. Session of the United Nations General Assembly in 1957. In 1958, the Canadian government appointed her as the delegate for Canada to the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women, to which Canada was elected for the first time for a three year term. She served on this Commission for the three-year term during which meetings were held in Geneva, Switzerland, in New York and in Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Senator Quart is the mother of four sons and one daughter, and has 22 grandchildren.

Members of the Catholic Women's League who will be in attendance at the National Convention in Charlottetown are looking forward to this address to be given by a fellow- member who is so highly qualified to deal with her subjects.

Shower Honors Young Couple

Mr. and Mrs. David Morrison, nee Vicki Denham of Montague, were honored at a miscellaneous shower on Monday evening, August 3, at the home of Mr. Morrison's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Morrison, New London.

The rooms were decorated with bouquets of summer flowers.

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Fyfe escorted the bridal couple to seats of honor while bridal music was played by Mrs. Wilbur MacKay.

The baskets of gifts were carried in by Wade, Carolyn and Patricia Morrison, small neighbor and nieces of the groom. The ribbons were cut by Mabel Montgomery and Betty Bertram, while the accompanying cards were read by Joyce Murray and Carol Henderson. The gifts were arranged by Gail Pickering and Marlene Brown.

Refreshments were served, and the remainder of the evening was spent in social chat and dancing to the music of records.

Mrs. Morrison is a member of the teaching staff at Montague School, and Mr. Morrison is employed with the firm of Ellis Bros., merchants, at Parkdale.

BURTON

Mr. and Mrs. Edmond Kelly, Roseville also celebrated their Golden Wedding anniversary this year.

Mrs. Henry Dalton, Burton recently spent a few days visiting in Charlottetown.

Linda Doyle, Glengarry and Susan Howard, Cape Wolfe were recent visitors to Charlottetown.

Hypnosis Planned To Aid Girl In Channel Effort

FOLKESTONE, England (Reuters) — A 14-year-old California school girl will be in a state of hypnosis when she attempts to become the youngest person ever to swim the English Channel next month.

Blue-eyed, sun-tanned Leonora Modell from Sacramento, arrived at this channel port Wednesday with her coach Paul Herron to prepare for the tough 22-mile swim in September.

Herron, who has himself swum the channel both ways, said: "Leonora will swim in a state of self-hypnosis although she does not know it as such. "If I tell her the water is warm, she will experience warm water no matter how cold it really is. Similarly I will control her efforts and command her to complete her swim under any conditions."

Herron, director of a swimming and fitness institute, said Leonora had been chosen as an experiment.

Will Lecture At McGill

MRS. GEORGE SABAPATHY

Mrs. George Sabapathy (formerly Isabel MacLeod of Murray River, P.E.I.) has recently arrived from London, England, to spend some time at her home in Murray River before going to Montreal, where she will be on the staff of McGill University as a lecturer in English literature.

Mrs. Sabapathy has had a brilliant academic career, graduating from Prince of Wales College and Dalhousie University with an honors degree in English literature. After teaching for two years at Montague High School, the former Miss MacLeod took her MA degree at Dalhousie University, and in 1958 proceeded to London, England, on an IODE Overseas Scholarship to study for her PhD degree at London University. Mrs. Sabapathy is returning to Canada for the academic year, 1964-65, and her husband, who is a barrister in London, hopes to join her here next year.

103 YEARS OLD

STRATFORD, Ont. (CP)— Mrs. Annie Wickie spent a quiet day at home with her family Thursday—but it was a special day. She was celebrating her 103rd birthday. Last year she attended the festival theatre here to mark her birthday.
