ELLEN'S DIARY

Mountain Ash And Rowan Tree Lend Airy Sweetness

So lilac bloom, we have. And now at Alderlea, we catch, too, the fragrance of the mountain ash: the rowan tree with its lacy flower heads, blossoming now to provide bright berry fare for Autumn's feathered folks, and to make also, it could be, a piquant jelly for the housewife's menus. In any event, the number of trees about us, in fencerow and by the stream and on lawn, lends much to the rural loveliness now obtaining and gives added sweetness to the air.

A gift indeed to the housewife who must spread her wash to the line, this day was, especially for those who may have experienced some frustration over performing this ancient Monday rite during some bleak wintry day. Then, no matter how beautiful the morning was, even as one pinned the warm, clean articles in place, they would stiffen in a lifeless state. Happy the pieces are these times, caressed by a light sunny breeze. And why not?

"Do you love outdoors?" Peter inquired, smiling up atus from the sandpile close by. He was entertaining himself then, pouring sand by way of a bright funnel to the box of his toy truck.

"Yes!" we replied heartily.

"I do too" he nodded. "I just love it-"

Fair skin, un-freckled, he has gained a becoming tan, as in a pair of Alex's mannish, outgrown overalls of blue demim, barefoot and mostly happy, he enjoys the sunny June-time days.

And where was Papa Starling?

"There, there, Hon" he was encouraging his dear one."I know this incubating is a monotonous time. Yes, the hours are long—but think of the outcome" "I'm not anticipating that with much enthusiasm. As I contemplate the added work the young' uns will make, it's as my old granny used to say

'Out of the frying pan into the fire!"

"You'll change your mind when you see them I know you will."

"Maybe so" she offered, her voice listless.

"I'll tell you, Honey, what you'll have to do. Forget this chore of sitting! See that pretty blue above that far green hill?"

"I — do."

"And that white cloud-like a plane, eh? Then pretend that's your own! And" there was a tenderness in his tones, "off you go in it for a holiday!"

"What nonsense! That's for the birds" she commented, voice brightened. "How can I sit and think of holidaying when these eggs need to be turned! Oh, my, I should have tended to that before this! Here, don't just stand there a-gapin'! Be smart and lend a hand."

"That's the old spirit" he churkled, "My old sweetheart is come back to me." And altogether this was a delectable day. Busy! After a manner.

"There's a pretty bride Ellen" James comments, new glasses focused on the newspaper. He puts it aside, grins.

"When have I kissed you?" he queries.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night.....

West Queens WI Convention Indicative Of Active Year

The Greenvale Women's Institute were host to a large group of delegates from sixteen local institutes when they held their 37th annual convention in the Brookfield Hall on Wednesday afternoon. The theme chosen for the convention was "Pride in the Past — Faith in the Future." Mrs. John Carew, on behalf of the entertaining institute, extended a warm welcome to all present, to which Mrs. Duncan MacIntosh, Spring ton, replied.

The minutes of the last annual convention were read by the Secretary, Mrs. Bernsley Wonnacott, Mrs. Millar MacPherson of Greenvale, presided.

A condensed report of institute activities given by Mrs Errol Bagnall, Hazel Grove showed that a large variety of interesting and valuable projects had been completed by the local institutes during the past year.

Special speaker, Mrs. Aubrey Cutcliffe, Fredericton, using a chart to illustrate her talk, spoke on "The Origin, Growth and Functions of Women's Institute" from the level of the individual members and branches, Provincial branches and Federated Women's Institute to the Associated Country Women of the World.

The exhibits of handwork on display were then explained by Mrs. John Carew. A special feature was an exhibit of treasured antique quilts and mats, one made as long ago as 1876.

Mrs. Norman MacMillan, editor of the Provincial Women's Institute News, brought greetings from the Provincial Executive. She noted that the history of Prince Edward Island's Women's Institutes for the past 50 years has been completed and would be for sale at the Provincial Convention to be held at Prince of Wales College Auditorium on July 10 and 11. She also gave a brief history of Provincial Women's Institute work in the past 50 years,which showed an impressive list of achievements.

Greetings from the Women's Institute Branch were brought by Miss Doris LeClair who commended the institutes on all the work accomplished in the past year and expressed a desire for continued success in the future. She also gave detailed information on the needlework samples to be entered in the Tweedsmuir Competition for Women's Institute members.

Various types of entertainment and amusement were enjoyed throughout the afternoon. The Fredericton Women's Institute Chorus presented two selections "The Gypsies Warning" and "Sweet Bunch of Daisies" with two ladies depicting a bride and bridegroom of long ago. Two contests were conducted by Miss Marion MacInnis, of the Millvale Women's Institute and an amusing bit of "fun and nonsence" was presented by Mrs. MacNeill of the North Wiltshire Women's Institute. Miss Linda MacMillan entertained with a dance number on behalf of Hunter River Women's Institute and the Greenvale 4-H Club Girls rendered a vocal chorus. All the ladies present then participated in a sing-song.

Mrs. Miller Weeks, Pleasant Valley, reporting for the nominating Committee, named the executive delegates for the next annual convention to be entertained by the Hazel Grove Institute.

Mrs. Errol Bagnall will be president and Mrs. Wendell Craswell, secretary, of the 1964 convention.

Mrs. Walter Parsons, North Granville, extended a vote of thanks to the Greenvale ladies for their hospitality and to the Provincial delegates for the information brought to the attention of the convention assembly

At the close of the afternoon, a buffet ham and salad supper was served.

MARY HAWORTH

Wise Woman Resolves To Respect Son's Wife

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The first of my four sons is to be married soon. May God remind me constantly to accept and respect my new daughter-in-law as I wanted to be accepted and respected 25 years ago.

My husband's mother couldn't understand why I wouldn't change my ideas to conform to hers; why I refused to rear my children as she had raised hers; and why the church means so much to me, instead of being far down the list as it is with her.

I felt that it wasn't my place to wrangle with her. Rather I consider it the man's business to inform his mother from the start (if need be) that he intends to side with his wife, whether she be right or wrong.

Had my husband been mature enough to do this sooner, much unhappiness would have been averted. When he finally took a stand backing me, the trouble faded.

I believe the older woman has the major responsibility for maintaining in-law harmony. Having experience and maturity, she should sympathetically overlook some of the bride's blunders and flare-ups, remembering how unsure it is to feel unsure of oneself and defensive about it.

Also the mother has more to lose if a rift develops. Because in the final analysis a man who is manly will stick to his wife and turn away from his mother if a choice must be made.

No decent woman enjoys putting her husband in a position of having to choose. But sometimes, where the situation is becoming unbearable, it must be done. Then the husband has to decide whether he really meant those marriage vows taken before God and in the presence of his mother (usually).

Marriage counsellors, who study in-law problems, list three main factors causing trouble. First, two women of different generations are competing in a sense for one man's affection; and this is doubly true if there was a close mother-son relationship.

Second, the mother-in-law too often fails to accept the wife for the person she is, quite aside from how she may differ from the "dieal" the mother had in mind for her son.

Third, the older woman's tendency to interfere. She must not interfere. Surely I understand how difficult this is: I am a woman and have trouble keeping my mouth shut too. Sincerely,

R.F.

DEAR R.F.: If I were writing a headline to introduce your letter, I think I would simply use the well worn phrase "To Whom It May Concern —."

Your reflective exhortation to all mothers of sons, to be openhearted, sympathetic, respectful and accepting to the brides they bring home, is surely appropriate to this month of June — the traditional season of marrying.

I do agree with you that the man's mother should generously assign herself the lion's share of responsibility for keeping the peace and in fact promoting positive good will. But alas, as we know, not a few older women seen to feel it is the daughter-in-law's obligation as an interloper) to curry favor on her knees as it were.

As an extreme instance of how hostile a jealous mother can be, there is the true story of the woman who was heard to exclaim, in a flash of fury at her son and his wife, for bypassing her attempts to divide and rule: "Mark my word, he'll be sorry for this. A man may marry a dozen wives; but he has only one mother, and he had better treat her accordingly!"

Imagine the difficulties of newlyweds, facing the hazards of trying to appease that implacable, essentially immoral viewpoint, while also hanging on to integrity, self-respect and harmony in their provate life and overall family relationships.

Thank heaven for mothers like you.

M.H.

Blueberries And Angel Mix In Delicious Cake

Blueberries are a-comin' in. Perhaps this is the reason why, one balmy June night, I had a delightful dream.

Up in the sky, perched on a wall of fleecy clouds, was a row of angles, wings aflutter with pleasure, enjoying bowlfuls of blueberries and fluffy whipped cream.

The following cake from the test kitchen is the materialistic, more logical aftermath.

Measurements are level

BLUEBERRY ANGEL FOOD CAKE

1 pkg. angel food cake mix
1 c. fresh cultivated blueberries
½ c. sugar
1½ c. water or apple juice
1 envelope unflavored gelatine
1-3 c. cold water or apple juice, additional
1 tsp. lemon juice
1 c. heavy cream, whipped

Make the angel food cake according to pkg. directions. Cool.

Combine fresh blueberries sugar and water or apple juice in saucepan. Bring to boil; simmer 5 min.

Put through sieve or food press to eliminate skins.

Soften gelatin in additional cold water or juice; add to hot blueberry juice, stirring until gelatin is dissolved. Add lemon juice.

Chill until beginning to thicken.

Beat with rotary hand or electric mixer until light, fluffy, and standing in peaks. Mix in whipped cream.

Slice cake into two layers; spread 1-3 of blueberry- cream mixture on bottom layer. Chill 15 min. Put on top layer; press gently into place.

Cover cake top and sides with remaining blueberry cream.

Decorate top with additional fresh blueberries.

Refrigerate at least 2 hrs. or until ready to serve.
