THE MANAGER'S SAFE.

At this moment, Mr. Price entered and reminded the manager of an appointment at the Bank of England, an appointment (it will be remembered) to exchange a receipt of the Bank of England for £10,000 worth of bonds deposited there and belonging to Messrs. Bulling. The manager made his excuses to the directors, promised to be back in half an hour, and went out.

As soon as Inspector Crump knew him to be off the premises, he turned to the directors and said, sharply:

"Gentlemen, you must excuse me if I am abrupt. I am acting in your interest, and I am obliged to be plain-spoken. I will stake my reputation that the man who has just left the room is responsible for the disappearance of Messrs. Bulling & Company's bonds."

"No, no, no! Impossible!" ejaculated his worthy listeners, throwing up their hands in deprecation of the wrong done to their faithful servant by the mere suggestion.

"I beg pardon," said the detective. "I am accustomed to read guilt or innocence in a man's manners, as well as his actions. Your manager tries to hide from me a guilty conscience and he cannot do it."

"What right have you to say such things?" asked the indignant Board of Directors in one voice.

The Inspector continued in his own way.

"From what I hear of the boy Aspin, he hasn't the pluck to steal and hide a great parcel of bonds. He hadn't even an opportunity of doing so, without the certainty of the manager seeing them protruding from his pocket. The lad may have stolen the fifty-pound note, or he may have had it given to him; but take my word for it, in this unfortunate business, he is more sinned against than sinning."

"If that is all you have to say," broke in the chairman of the Board of Directors, "we shall be obliged by your keeping your opinions to yourself, and confining yourself to your duty."

"It is my duty to warn you, sir," retorted the detective. "The manager has averted suspicion by throwing it on Mr. Aspin. I don't know if Aspin is his dupe or his confederate, or both. But we must not lose sight of the manager till we have had it out with Aspin. Not that the young one has the bonds. The old one has the bonds himself, or he has posted them to Spain."

"Spain!" exclaimed the directors.

"Yes," and the Inspector laughed. "No extradition treaty between this country and Spain, you see."

"But, if the manager is the culprit, why has he risked detection by staying here?"

"Why, sir, because he hasn't got all the bonds he wants, I should say."

"Monstrous! Perfectly monstrous!" declared the directors, unconvinced.

"Besides," urged one of them, "he could not reach Spain before his absence was discovered, and we would overtake him by telegraph."

"Think so, sir?" said the detective. "Why, he might slip off unperceived to-night, be in Paris on Sunday morning, and across the Spanish frontier before you gentlemen are awake on Monday. Then where are you?"

The directors could hardly fail to appreciate these remarks, although they still remained incredulous.

"There is not the slightest foundation," urged one of them, "for suspecting that the manager has any intention whatever of running away to Spain or anywhere else."

"Excuse me, sir," returned the detective, "but it is my business to suspect. Please to remember that although Mr. Aspin has absconded, we have only the manager's story against him. We ought to hear what the young man has to say. Remember that the bonds were in the manager's possession, and that the missing fifty pound note was the manager's. How do we know that the second tourist's ticket to Spain is not for the manager's use? I have ascertained for a fact that Mr. Aspin had no companion with him."

"Then what is your advice, Mr. Crump?"

"My advice, gentlemen, is—treat the manager as usual, and wait until he runs away with all he can lay his hands on!"

At this curious counsel, the several elderly gentlemen constituting the Board of Directors of the Continental Banking Corporation uttered one cry of fear and astonishment.

"But why not arrest him at once?"

"Because he has possibly provided against that event, by sending away the bonds he stole yesterday, and we could prove nothing."

"What on earth, then, are we to do?"

"Treat him just as usual, I say—just as if nothing had happened, gentlemen. Leave the rest to me."

When the manager returned, he carried a small black bag in his hand. This he locked up in his safe. One of the directors suggested that any valuable papers ought to be deposited in the strong room. But the manager demurred.

"They will be safe enough here," he declared, in a casual manner.

The directors began to suspect in their hearts that there might be some wisdom in attending to the detective's warning. They took care, however, not to betray themselves.

It was comparatively early on Sunday morning, before the good Paris folk had sat down to dejeuner, that Mr. Aspin, having thoroughly enjoyed his short sojourn in the French capital, betook himself to the railway station where he intended to take train in his flight toward sanctuary.

But his steps were arrested before the scene of an accident in the street. A little crowd was collecting round a hired conveyance which had been upset. The occupant, a middle-aged man with a dark beard, had been thrown out, and was stunned by the fall. A hand-bag lay close beside him; it had burst open, and some of the contents were slipping from its mouth.

One of these papers Mr. Aspin raised out of the mud. As he did so a cry of surprise escaped him: the document was the very same bond, belonging to Messrs. Bulling & Company, which he had stolen and restored.

"You know this gentleman?" asked a voice in English, and a hand was laid on Aspin's shoulder.

"I—I—I—thought I did!" stammered the lad, fearing to betray himself.

"You had better say 'yes' at once, Mr. Aspin. I am a detective from Scotland Yard, and I presume that this gentleman is the person I expected to find sooner or later in your company."

The young man made a virtue of necessity. He allowed himself to be taken back to England in tow, and confessed his share in the robbery of the bank—a point which went in his favor in settling up.

The manager followed later, also in tow. He was scarcely let off so easily as the lad Aspin, and he is not likely to do any banking for some years to come.

* * * * * *

"How did the manager escape?" said Inspector Crump, deeply mortified at having been "bested," in spite of all his suspicions.

"Why, it was this way. The manager goes home that Saturday afternoon, looking as innocent as a saint, and carrying a handbag crammed full of bonds.

"So I says to him. 'Not much fear of my troubling you, sir, till Monday. That young rascal Aspin won't betray himself all at once, I guess, wherever he is now. We must be content to watch him.'

"Says the manager, 'I want a little rest badly. This affair has upset me terribly. Don't worry me, if you can help it, on the Sabbath day?' 'I won't sir,' says I.

"I put my watchers on—one in front, and the other behind—his private residence. They were both good men. But he fooled one of them entirely. Just as the evening was getting dark, the parlor-maid hails a four-wheeler from the stand opposite, and brings a Gladstone bag along, and out comes a gent muffled up to the eyes, and cabby is told to drive to Euston like mad. My man stationed in front of the house follows in haste, believing it to be the manager. It wasn't! He started two minutes later, and landed at Charing Cross, while my man was messing about the London and North Western Railway.

"How did I find it out? Why, I went round as usual to see how my men were getting on, and I found one gone. Up I marches to the cab stand, asks a cabby some questions. Front man on the rank says he was hailed to the house, but a growler got the fare to Euston. Presently another gent leaves the house in another growler. He describes this gentleman and says he heard him holloa 'Charing Cross.' That's how I knew.

"And then I telegraphed on to Folkstone, Dover and Paris, mighty sharp, but the manager disguised himself before he got to Dover; and, by Jove! if it hadn't been for the carriage accident in Paris, we should have lost him!"—The London Argosy.

Don't Stuff a Cold.

If you do you will, nine times in ten, have a fever to starve. A cold is a shock received by the myriad nerves that bristle near the surface of a human body. This shock is transmitted to the nerve centres, and then back to the mucous membranes, forcing a great amount of blood to those membranes, creating a more or less severe irritation, and consequent rise in the temperature, followed by chills. Excess of food in the stomach still more increases the temperature; and, worst of all, helps clog the secretions or natural outlets of the body. It is high time we broke away from an old notion which, like some others, has done more harm than good. For example, in years past how many poor fever sufferers, burning with an internal fire and thirst, were hurried to an untimely grave because not allowed cooling drinks or a bit of ice by the old time treatment for fevers, as foolish as the adage for fools. At last one cunning delirious patient got to a pump of cold water and drank his fill; determined not to leave until the well ran dry, he slacked the fever, recovered, and doctors learned a lesson. Experimenting with a severe cold is a dangerous custom, as most persons try one remedy only until some friend suggests another "sure cure," as Mark Twain so humorously describes. When slight hoarseness or tightening of the nasal membranes warns one of a skin exposure or chill from wet, act promptly; a delay is dangerous. With children it may mean croup and strangulation; with adults, catarrh, bronchitis, perhaps pneumonia. If neglected, nothing can prevent the sneezing, red nose and woe begone look of a person with a cold. Scores of mothers would as soon go to bed without matches in the house as without that old fashioned remedy, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, near at hand for croupy children. Used with a mild laxative, as described in a pamphlet which I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass., will send free to anyone. Johnson's Liniment will cure a cold for adults quicker than any known remedy. A mild, nutritious diet, a gentle physic to open the secretions, and a bottle of that old Anodyne from your druggist, will conquer any cold. Johnson's Anodyne Liniment was originated by an old family physician more than seventy years ago.

USE SKODA'S DISCOVERY, the great blood and nerve remedy.

ST JOHN'S, Nfld, May 9—The statement of the seal crop this year shows that the catch was 128,339, weighing 3 367 tons; against 348,624, weighing 6,675 tons, last year. The weight unusually large now is due to the greater proportion of old seals. The crew of the Halifax steamer Newfoundland made the best average on shares; the crew of the Kite, the worst.

DR. KOCH'S cure for consumption went up like a rocket and came down like a stick; but Puttner's Emulsion still shines with undimmed lustre as the best remedy for wasting diseases.

A Brockville Druggist's Case

BROCKVILLE, April 24th.—The popular impression is that doctors and druggists seldom take their own medicine. This is no doubt true, but when a doctor takes ill he generally calls in one of his own profession, in whose skill he has every confidence, or when a druggist is in a similar situation, he often puts his faith in the preparations of some other chemist which he knows give good results. Both the doctors and druggists in such cases show their good sense. A case in point happened in this town a short time ago. Mr. F. M. Turner, the well known and popular druggist, who is now travelling for Parke, Davies & Co, has for a long time been a sufferer from congestion and inflammation of the kidneys. He tried a great many remedies, but without results. His patrons, however, spoke so highly of Dodd's Kidney Pills that he was induced to try them. He now states that he is completely cured, and to your correspondent he said that as a rule he had very little faith in patent medicines, but that for the cure of kidney troubles, rheumatism, backache, etc., he does not know of any remedy that is giving such good results as Dodd's Kidney Pills.....

Don't Wait for the Sick Room.

The experience of physicians and the public proves that taking Scott's Emulsion produces an immediate increase in flesh; it is, therefore, of the highest value in wasting diseases and consumption.

The Telephone Company —OF— P. E. ISLAND.

PARTIES using the Telephones would find talking much more satisfactory if they would observe the following rules:—

1st. Speak with the mouth about four inches from the transmitter.

2nd. Speak in a moderate tone of voice, not too loud, and distinctly.

3rd. Place the telephone so as to cover the ear, just as if you wished to shut out all other sounds. Do not press too hard on the ear.

It is possible to talk and be heard when standing back two or three feet from the transmitter, if you shout loud enough, but it is not a pleasant mode of conversation, is entirely unnecessary, and is a useless waste of wind and lungs, besides being very annoying to all within range of your voice.
