Describes Problems Of Agriculture In Bermuda

A Guardian representative had an interesting chat last night with Ildwal Wyn Hughes, assistant director of Agriculture in Bermuda, who was here last week inspecting some of the Prince Edward Island potato fields which will be supplying growers in his island with seed for their next crop year.

It is scarcely correct to use the term "crop year" in reference to Bermuda, for they grow two crops of spuds a year there. The fall crop is planted in September and October. The spring crop is planted in January and February.

Asked about production Mr. Hughes said "our crop is not so heavy as yours. We do not fertilize so heavily as you do, a n.d. moisture is a limiting factor. They plant from thirty-five to thirty-eight bushels per acre and get a yield of about five to one from the fall crop. They get a yield of about seven to one from the spring planting.

The temperature never goes below forty degrees in winter and seldom goes over 85 in the summer; so their temperature is free, for the most part from extremes of heat and cold.

VIEWED POTATO FIELDS As the official representative of the Department of Agriculture, Mr. Hughes was here to take a first hand look at the fields from which potatoes will go to Bermuda for seed purposes. This will enable us "to issue import permits," he explained. Otherwise their importers would not be allowed to bring the potatoes in.

Asked about potato pests in his country, Mr. Hughes said that blight was perhaps the most serious. "We have a potato beetle (commonly called potato bugs) here and "we have no ring rot," he stated. The potato varieties grown in Bermuda are Bliss Triumphs, Pontiacs, Kennebecs, Sebagoes, and Keswicks. Most of their early varieties are purchased in Nova Scotia but they do buy some here each year. Their agriculture is on a very small scale with small plots being used for farming. The entire island consists of only 12,000 acres with about one thousand being under cultivation for agriculture.

The young couple returned to the capital early in June from Frobisher Bay, N.W.T., with 10 months-old Shona who was born in the eastern Arctic community. A few hours before she left the town 1,300 air miles north of Ottawa, Madge told this reporter: "I'll be sorry to leave this place."

Are Homesick For Frobisher

By CAROLYN WILLET Canadian Press Staff Writer OTTAWA (CP) — Scottish-born Madge and Frank Allured readily admit they're homesick for their adopted Baffin Island town.

The young couple returned to the capital early in June from Frobisher Bay, N.W.T., with 10 months-old Shona who was born in the eastern Arctic community.

A few hours before she left the town 1,300 air miles north of Ottawa, Madge told this reporter: "I'll be sorry to leave this place."

BIG SEND-OFF The large number of Eskimo and white residents on hand to say good-bye to the popular family spoke for itself.

Now home in Ottawa, Madge recalled that once last winter she ran parka - clad around her kitchen table to keep warm while Frobisher froze in windy, 57-below-zero weather.

But she still hasn't changed her mind about the townsie nestled between treeless barrens and a 200-mile-long bay.

Her husband, an engineer and technical service officer for the northern affairs department, declared in an interview: "I'm going back for a holiday as soon as I can."

Frank spent 18 months at Frobisher, working with a crew of four skilled Eskimo mechanics and maintenance men. Together, they built a 40-foot-long Bailey bridge, wired houses and put up power lines for the growing town.

Madge joined her husband three months after his arrival for a 16-month stay in a compact frame house, oil heated and electrically equipped.

But the oil heating sometimes couldn't cope with Arctic winds and driving snow. Running water was often sorely missed in a community where most homes have only water barrels.

However, there were other things. For the Allureds, it was the Eskimo community spirit and the natives' desire to co-operate, that made Frobisher a special place.

Their daughter is the first, and so far the only, white baby born at the national health department's nursing station in the town 200 miles south of the Arctic Circle.

Shona, it seems, was the centre of attraction in the predominantly-Eskimo community of about 70 persons for two main reasons. She had just a little blond hair and a noticeable nose.

Eskimo babies, Madge explained, are born with a thick cap of black hair and a flat, hardly-discernible nose.

Shona's nose still brings back Arctic memories. She has a habit of wrinkling it—something she learned from 16-year-old Peeyulia, the Allureds' devoted babysitter. Madge said it means "no."

Shona's baby carriage still is in Frobisher. Tikivik, the nursing station's young Eskimo interpreter, preferred to buy it for his baby son rather than order a new one.

The Allureds left many other things. Frank's popular recorded Scottish songs were distributed among the Eskimo men who had become close friends. He swapped English words for Eskimo equivalents and now speaks the language, possibly with a Scottish burr.

3 Independents May Hold Key Role At Session

OTTAWA (CP) — Three independent labels in the June 10 election will occupy a strategic position at the new session of Parliament opening Oct. 14.

There could be a situation in which their vote could topple Prime Minister Diefenbaker's Conservative government. This would happen if the Liberals, CCF and the Independents lined up against the Conservative and Social Credit members.

The position of the Independents is in sharp contrast with that of three Independents in the last Parliament. Because of the huge Liberal majority they didn't matter which way they voted.

PICK UP MEMBERS However, in the new Parliament both the Conservatives and the Liberals will pay more than passing attention to the Independents. Both parties already have picked up members elected on Independent tickets.

Conservative strength now stands at 111, including Henri Courtemanche, elected in Labelle, Que., as in Independent Progressive Conservative. The Liberals can rely on 106 votes including William Benidickson, Liberal-Labor member for Kenora - Rainy River, Ont., and Samuel Boulanger, elected as an Independent Liberal in Quebec's Drummond-Athabaska.

Mr. Benidickson was parliamentary assistant to former finance minister Harris in the last Parliament. Mr. Boulanger was secretary to the Liberal caucus a few days after the election.

The rest of the House is made up of 25 members of the CCF party, 19 Social Crediters, one independent Liberal and two straight Independents. There is a vacancy in Lanark, Ont., caused by the death of Dr. William G. Blair, Conservative. A by-election there will be held Sept. 9.

A pioneer in Canadian frozen food processing and distribution. Mr. Heene explained that the new P.E.I. venture will add substantially to the present domestic frozen supply and help cut the volume of U.S. imports. It will also assure better general quality of the finished product.

Just outside Charlottetown, the new plant will have the greatest capacity of its kind in Canada. When in full operation, it will absorb a large portion of the small fruit and vegetable output of "The Garden of the Gulf".

Provincial Government authorities estimate the Heene organization's investment could mean a gross revenue of $1,000,000, to P.E.I. in a good crop year. The labor force, to be recruited locally is included in this figure.

U. S. Cost Of Living Reaches A Record High

NEW YORK (AP) — Inflation bounced back into the United States news this week as bankers, industrialists, merchants and consumers worried about mounting costs and rising prices.

The impact of inflation on John Q. Consumer was spotlighted in the government's latest cost-of-living index. It showed consumer prices at a record high, and still climbing.

In June the index rose to 120.2 per cent of the 1947-49 average, setting a new high for the 10th straight month. That means it took more than $120 to buy the groceries, shelter, clothes, transportation, fun, education and personal and medical care that $100 would have bought nine years ago.

Government economists said the July index would be even higher. But they held out a ray of hope: The upturn may be halted for at least a while when major farm crops are harvested this autumn.

Businessmen, too, could look forward to more inflation. Auto and truck tire prices were just about due for another increase; aluminum prices were scheduled to rise in a few days. Railroad rates were being asked about another fat boost in freight rates. Retailers figured on paying more for appliances and other steel-containing items as a result of the recent rise in basic steel prices.

WAGE INCREASE Wage costs continued to move up. The latest hike in the government's cost-of-living index brought another round of automatic pay raises for 650,000 workers in such key lines as electrical manufacturing, aircraft production, trucking and construction.

Still holding inflation in check were two massive economic forces. One was an unprecedented abundance of industrial raw materials and consumer goods. The other was a shortage of easy credit. With goods plentiful and cheap credit scarce, consumers and businessmen lacked earlier incentives to spend.

Consumers were still buying this week but they were in a cautious mood and inclined to shop carefully for bargains. Auto sales reflected the trend: Used cars were in strong demand while factory-fresh models sold at discounts.

The much-discussed cost squeeze on profits was apparent in this week's batch of corporate earnings reports, but there were notable exceptions. One was Chrysler, whose first-half earnings skyrocketed to a new high of $8,741,000, up a breath-taking 380 per cent from a year ago. Others included Ford, whose first-half profits climbed 30 per cent, and Bethlehem Steel, which scored new first-half highs in production, sales and earnings.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CAMP AT AUGUSTINE COVE

Upward of 45 young people both Baptist and United Church attended a weekend camp at the M.R.E.C. site at Augustine Cove. The camp director was Rev. Donald MacLachlan of Kingsport. Camp leaders were Rev. T.R. Gouge, Pownall; Rev. Owen Cochran, North River; Rev. R. Earle; Tryon and Allison MacKinnon, Charlottetown.

Camp administrator was Mr. Ernest Aarup, Summerside. The program included discussion periods on the subject of reading the Bible. Mr. MacLachlan took for his theme address, "What is Your Life?" Basing his remarks on a passage from the Book of James in which life is compared to a vapour, the speaker reminded the young people that steam if kept in check can produce great energy but if allowed to escape passes off as a useless vapour. He stressed the importance of putting Christ first in their lives if they were to count for something. Recreations consisted of swimming, volley ball, soft ball and hiking. The camp closed on Sunday evening with devotions and hymn singing around a camp fire.

Heene Company Announces Start Of Frozen Food Plant

LA PRAIRIE, QUEBEC—Contracts have been let and construction started on a modern $700,000 food freezing and processing plant at Sherwood, Prince Edward Island, it was announced today by W.H. Heene, president of Heene and La Prairie, Quebec.

Mr. Heene said the decision to establish a new production unit in P.E.I. was taken as a result of agreements reached with the Provincial Government whereby Island farmers will provide a steady supply of homegrown small fruits and vegetables.

Expected to be in operation by June, 1958, the new plant will be largest of its type in Canada. It will provide a ready market for the Island's farm output which after processing, will be distributed across the country.

To operate the P.E.I. plant, a new company has been formed, Prince Edward Island Frozen Foods Limited. It will function as a production unit of Heene Frozen Foods Limited under the management of the Heene organization. Mr. Heene is president of the new company. He will also act as general manager. Staff will be drawn from experts who have gone through the various departments of the parent company.

The entire P.E.I. Frozen Food Ltd. pack will be taken up by Heene Frozen Foods Ltd. for "ZERO-PAK" label, said Mr. Heene.

ATHLETE'S FOOT Q. Is athlete's foot very catching? A. Opinions vary. Some American doctors who have made a special study of the disease say that spread of athlete's foot in families is rare. Doctors at the New York University Post-Graduate Medical School soaked the feet of 66 people who were not infected in a foot-bath containing fungus organisms which cause athlete's foot. Not one person developed foot symptoms. The physicians believe that the fungus is present on the feet of many people but that symptoms develop only when skin resistance is lowered. English physicians take a different view. They believe that athlete's foot can be spread rather easily. A infected member of the family should, they say, use separate bathroom articles and take other precautions until the condition can be cleared up.
