common people heard them gladly and on-casts hung upon his lips.

"His sermons were the healthful talk
"That shorter made the mountains walk;
"His wayside texts were flowers and birds
"Where mingled with his gracious words.
"The rustle of the tamarisk tree
"And ripple wash of Gallilee."
"What Union of simplicity and sublimity: only the greatest know the art of artlessness.

But the teaching itself. He never speculates, never argues, but with the utmost naturalness reveals God and spiritual realities. His words are never a weary doubt. Others even the greatest will say it may be so, or as a conclusion is reached, therefore it must be so. He alone says, it is so.

With what audacious positiveness she grasps truths which the foremost have touched hesitatingly. Cicero said, "there is, I know not how, in the minds of men a certain presage, as it were, of a future existence". Socrates said, "I hope to go hence to good men, but of that I am not very confident. Nor doth it become any wise man to be positive that so it will be".

Boswell said to Johnson, "The evidences of a future life are sufficient." "I could wish," answered Johnson, "that they were stronger."

The worlds revolve around us, the stars glitter in their abysmal depths, but no voice breaks the solemn silence. The picture in "Tancred" of the hero journeying to Sinai and prostrating himself on its bold summit, crying for a new revelation is a pathetic illustration of the soul's ceaseless desire for some authentic utterance from Heaven.

Oppressed by all human inability to solve life's mysteries, we turn to Christ and venture to ask of him replies to the deepest question of the age.

Is there a great first cause?
Yes, I came forth from God, Is there a future life?
Yes, I go to prepare a place for you, Can man know God?
He that hath seen me has seen the Father, Does the Great Creator care for me?
He feeds the birds and clothes the flowers, will he not much more care for you!
Is it rational to pray?
Ask and you shall receive, Can I receive absolution from my sin?
Yes, the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins.

We reverently pause and ask, who is it that seems to speak the language and live in the light of another world, who spoke so simply of the greatest things and even of Divine things that we feel He must have been familiar and at home with them, speaks with the ease with which a prince would speak of the royalty of his father's house?

"The acknowledgement of God in Christ, I say, Accepted by the reason, solves for thee, All questions in this life and out of it."

To accept Him is the answer to the otherwise unanswerable problems of life, and the arch heresy, the only heresy is to refuse Him that speaketh from Heaven.

"Will ye also go away? From looking out upon the sea of chaos away from Him, the soul from its deepest depths answers, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

"Yea, Amen! O changeless one, thou only Art life's guide and spiritual goal, Thou the light across the dark vale lonely, Thou the eternal heaven of the soul, And his lofty teaching found perfect illustration in His own life. If we did not see Him, yet so many did not when he was with them and so many do not to-day, but if we did not see Him, we surely would lay our lives at His feet and take as the touchstone of daily conduct, "What would Jesus do? All human greatness on closer inspection shows defect, but His character grows more pure, sacred and lovely the better we know Him.

"Must ask some sweet forgiveness,
Which we leap to give.
But Thee, but thee, O sovereign seer of time,
But thee, O poets' poet, wisdom's tongue,
But thee, O man's best man, O love's best love,
O perfect life in perfect labour writ,

"His garments smell of myrrh and aloes and cassia out of the ivory palaces."
Yonder is Japan, in the wide plain about Tokyo, in the distance the Harkone mountains, but in the midst of Harkone's highest peaks stands Fujiyama solitary, majestic, peerless, sublime.

And there is the great plain of history, the multitudes who have lived and died and are forgotten, then there are its mountain peaks, the great and good, but standing alone in the midst of all, in peerless majesty is He whom God hath given a name which is above every name, or as the Revised version with new richness of meaning renders it, gave unto Him the Name that is above names, for do we not feel that even to compare Him with others is an indignity?

And why? Why but because of the truth, so evident, that He is not only perfect man but more than man. When He said that all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father, the Jews took up stones to stone Him, because He had made Himself equal with God. Did he say, you are mistaken, I did not mean that. No. That was just what He did mean.

He is the sure foundation; upon this rock He builds His Church.

To say that we are not satisfied with the attempt to bring him before our vision is itself an irreverence. He could not be presented that we would not wish to express our failure in the words of Presence.

Gladly, thou Divine Son of Mary, had I said something great of Thee. At times I thought I saw, in the flashing light of a blessed hour, thy Divine Majesty adorned in spotless purity; but as I was about to fix the holy vision, the pencil trembled in my unskilled hand, and I could give only a pale outline. Who are we that attempt to describe thy holiness!

Thus every attempt must fail. "If the Lord is what the church has, from the beginning believed him to be, the Eternal in time, it is inconceivable that there can ever be an adequate reproduction of him. His greatness must be the surprise of the centuries. The last hours of time must have for their rancor the fresh unvelings of His Majesty, and the perpetual delight of the everlasting tuturs must be the ever grander discovery of his significance."

Let us, in conclusion, remind ourselves again how secure the church's one foundation is. The shadows lie over many a field of knowledge but the star shines clear upon the path that leads to Him. At twenty, the young christian issue of many things, at forty he may not be sure of so many but he knows a few, tested and enriched and made unspeakably precious by the experiences, it may be the sorrows of life. But his manhood faith is the faith of his childhood. God's love, Christ's saving power, the blessedness of His service; and the faith which runs through all his years is the simple faith of all the ages.

When our eyes open upon the unseen, many of our convictions may prove to be errors or half-discerned truths, but he will abide. The truth as it is in Jesus, that cannot be shaken.

"This anchor shall my soul sustain.
When earth's foundations melt away."

In the early years of this century one who had some part in planting on this Island the tree of Methodism, under whose spreading branches we are gathered together to-night, lay dying. Many are the changes since then, changes in religious thought, changes in the ways of looking at truth, but no changes that prevent his great-grand-son from making his great-grand-father's last words his own.

'In suffering be thy love my peace,
In weakness be thy love my power,
And when the storms of life shall cease,
Jesus, in that important hour,
In death as life be Thou my guide,
And save me, who for me hast died."

Dearly beloved, I am permitted to speak to you this evening. I may not be permitted to speak to you again. May I leave these words with you as my confession of faith, and as the reason, the more than sufficient reason for going so far away:— They do not know of Christ.

Tent Pins.

Tent pins are mostly made of white oak. They must be of tough wood to stand the hard knocks to which they are subjected. They are made in lengths of 16 and 24 inches. Made of hard wood as they are they are yet liable to be broken, and they are also lost. Even in peace the consumption of tent pins is considerable. A manufacturer of tents might carry in stock 5,000 or 10,000 tent pins. In war times the demand is of course far greater. Like many other manufactured articles of wood, tent pins are made in the west, in factories in proximity to the forests whence the supplies of wood are drawn.—New York Sun.
