Soviet-Chinese Papers Exchange New Blasts

MOSCOW (AP)—The ideological battle of the Soviet Union and Communist China increased in intensity, each accusing the other of betraying communism and playing into the hands of imperialism.

In the tumult of words, however, Moscow made an implied invitation to Peking to settle the ideological differences by collective discussion.

The latest exchange came in editorials in Pravda, the Soviet Communist party newspaper, and Red Flag, the theoretical magazine of the Chinese Communist party.

Each side took unusual steps to get its message across. Pravda's entire editorial was broadcast by Moscow radio and transmitted in the foreign service of the official news agency, Tass.

Red flag's broadside, in turn, was reprinted in all of China's newspapers, said Peking radio broadcast.

OBLIQUE FIRE

As usual, the Russians directed their fire at Albania, the little Balkan nation backing China in the dispute. But it was made a little clearer than before that China was the target.

Time after time, Pravda's editorial uses a new phrase to emphasize this — "the Albanian leaders and those who support them."

Red Flag does not mention Premier Khrushchev and the Soviet Communists. But it answers directly a whole series of indirect charges made by Soviet officials.

Pravda is as direct, decrying the Chinese claim that the Soviet Union and its backers represent only "a temporary majority" in the Communist camp. It is in this connection that Pravda makes its implied appeal for a settlement.

"The Communist parties," says Pravda, "have a tested method of settling contentious issues by way of collective discussion . . . The Communist party of the Soviet Union is deeply convinced that collective discussion of the most important questions of modern world development make it possible to insure cohesion of the international communist movement."

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	1♥	4♣	6♦

Opening lead—five of clubs.

If you look at the North and South hands, it's easy enough to see that the best contract is six notrump played by South. That contract is foolproof.

However, bridge being the kind of game it is, you don't expect to get the best contract always. There are too many intangibles in most deals for anyone to expect to reach the perfect contract all the time.

For example, take this deal where South ended in six diamonds. He could have bid his hand very differently, of course, but there's no assurance that the final contract wouldn't have been six diamonds or hearts if he had. In either case, the contract could be defeated by a club lead and continuation.

South might have used Blackwood instead of the bid he made, and, learning that the opponents had an ace, contracted for six notrump, but this is much easier to say, looking at all 52 cards, than looking at only 13.

West led a club and South had no trouble diagnosing the lead as a singleton. East's preemptive bid of four clubs in conjuction with the size of the club led, made it clear that East had a seven-card suit.

So when East won the opening lead with the ace, South smoothly played the king on it! Maybe East shouldn't have swallowed the bait, but he did.

He naturally thought his partner had the missing four of clubs and that South's king was a singleton. He therefore shifted to a spade, hoping his partner had the ace, but this hope was quickly dissipated when South played the ace, drew trumps, and claimed the rest.

If South had played the four of clubs on the ace, there is little doubt that East would have returned a club at trick two to defeat the contract. The falsecard proved highly effective.

It just goes to show that a discriminating falsecard, smartly timed, can produce an enormous swing. In this case the play gained South 1,670 points.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
