To the Memory of Willy Hodgson,

WHO DIED AUGUST 24, AGED 20 YEARS.

Dear Willy, he has left us,
We shall miss his pleasant face;
And in the family circle
There remains a vacant place.

In his last sickness
He endured pains most sore;
But with a patient fortitude
His sufferings he bore.

His parents, brothers and sisters
Did their best to ease his pain;
But all endeavors to prolong his life
Alas! did prove in vain.

Till God did please to give him ease
And take him to his rest;
For the good Lord, that ruleth all things,
He knoweth what is best.

And thus cut off in early life,
In all his youthful bloom;
They had to lay him sadly
In the silence of the tomb.

But though his body is lying
Beneath the cold, damp sod,
His spirit has gone upward
Unto the throne of God.

There with his loving Saviour
Forever shall he rest,
Through all the endless ages
In the mansions of the blest.

Let us, then, not sorrow,
But wipe our weeping eyes,
And pray that we may meet him
In the land beyond the skies.

For in those realms of glory
All cares and troubles cease;
Lord, grant that this affliction
To his family bring Thy peace.

When Does Old Age Begin.

Some men are old at forty, while others may be almost said to be young at eighty. A man is just as old as his tissues, particularly those of his heart and brain, and there are octogenarians who, for mental and even physical volatility, might be their own grandsons. The secret of such perpetual youth lies mostly in regular exercise, whether in felling trees or in the humbler form of the daily "constitutional." Even when life has at last fallen into the sere and yellow leaf, exercise of a kind and amount suited to the "shrunk shanks," stiff joints, brittle bones, and other evidences of senility, will keep the furnace of the vital locomotive aglow long after others less carefully stoked have paled their ineffectual fires. But this can only be done (to continue the metaphor) by slackening speed and reducing pressure. If old men will jump hedges as in their salad days they will not improbably do so to a musical accompaniment of snapping thigh bones. If they run to catch trains their hearts are extremely likely to mark their sense of such an outrage by stopping work. Dr. Hammond of Washington has collected seventy cases which have occurred in that city during the last ten years of men dying suddenly from running after street cars.

If a man has ridden all his life he may continue to do so as long as he can sit upon a horse, otherwise this exercise is too violent for the aged. The "constitutional" is unquestionably the sheet anchor of old age as far as exercise is concerned. I need say nothing more about it than that each walk should be taken with a definite purpose, if it is only to set one's watch by a particular clock. To have an object of some kind makes all the difference between healthful exercise and the listless dragging about of the dead weight of one's own body, which makes walking one of the most fatiguing as well as the dreariest of all forms of motion. To sum up the whole subject, the golden rule for exercise through all the seven chapters of man's strange, eventful history, is to use it so that the stream of life shall flow swift and clear, never stagnating like a muddy pond, and, on the other hand, never dashing itself to pieces in mere foam and fury.—Morell Mackenzie.

Water as a Medicine.

The human body is constantly undergoing tissue changes. Worn out particles are cast aside and eliminated from the system, while the new are ever being formed, from the inception of life to its close.

Water has the power of increasing these tissue changes, which multiply the waste products, but at the same time they are renewed by its agency, giving rise to increased appetite, which in turn provides fresh nutriment. Persons but little accustomed to drink water are liable to have the waste products formed faster than they are removed. Any obstruction to the free working of natural laws at once produces disease, which, if once firmly seated, requires both time and money to cure.

People accustomed to rise in the morning weak and languid will find the cause in the imperfect secretion of wastes, which many times may be remedied by drinking a full tumbler of water before retiring. This very materially assists in the process during the night, and leaves the tissues fresh and strong, ready for the active work of the day.

Hot water is one of our best remedial agents.

A hot bath on going to bed, even in the hot nights of summer, is a better reliever of insomnia than many drugs.

Inflamed parts will subside under the continued poulticing of real hot water.

Very hot water, as we all know, is a prompt checker of bleeding, and besides, if it is clean, as it should be, it aids in sterilizing our wound.

A riotous or rotten stomach will nearly always gratefully receive a glass or more of hot water.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Dyspepticure—Is not a palliative, but a cure; it first relieves, then controls, and finally entirely subdues the irritation and inflammation of the stomach that causes ndigestion and dyspepsia.

Scaring an Englishman.

(From the N. Y. World.)

There was a very green Englishman at West Point, Ga., who was talking about purchasing land near by for a peach orchard, and as he strolled around the depot the half dozen drummers who happened to meet there put up a job on him. One of them borrowed a coat and hat of a farmer, took the cartridges out of his revolver, and with the weapon held aloft in his hand he suddenly jumped into the waiting room and yelled:—

"Whoop! I'm a cantankerous old fighter from the headwaters of Fighting Creek! I'm half hoss and half alligator! I'm down on everything that walks on two legs, particularly Englishmen! Whar's the bloody, bloomin' Briton who called me a liar?"

"What's the row about?" inquired the Englishman, as he came to a halt and faced about.

"Whoop! I've fit in three wars and kept a graveyard of my own the rest of the time!" shouted the terror as he danced around. "Down on yer marrow-bones and beg my pardon if you want to live two minutes longer!"

"I dawn't have to, ye know!" drawled the Briton, cool as ice, and he squared off and landed a thumper on the drummer's nose, which piled him over among the sacks of cotton seed meal and dazed him so that he couldn't speak for the next five minutes. We had to hold the "foreigner" to keep him from following up, and then when the drummer had been sponged off and brought to he sat on a baggage truck and held his nose and reflected for a long time. Then he slowly remarked:

"When you fellows get through being tickled perhaps you can explain at just what stage of the game the belt run off."

A Cargo of Serpents.

[St. James' Gazette.]

For two years agents of Mr. William Cross, the naturalist of Earle street, Liverpool, have been engaged in India in the collection of serpents, the result being that a cargo of the reptiles has just arrived in Liverpool. After traversing the jungle districts, the collectors succeeded in capturing or purchasing from the natives who joined in the hunt about 300 pythons, some of them 14 feet in length, being secured. About 50 died on the journey through the country or failed to survive the passage home, when for the purpose of transit they were placed in long coffin-like cases, through which, of course, holes were bored for ventilation and feeding.

The surviving reptiles to the number of about 250 were unpacked at Mr. Cross's premises, Earle Street, but so excited were they on escaping from their long confinement that they gave considerable trouble. Some of the assistants, in endeavoring to recapture them, as they wound themselves with remarkable alacrity round posts, stair banisters and the legs and bodies of those who happened to be in the way, sustained bites, which, happily, have not proved serious. Some of the larger ones also took to swallowing the smaller fry. The place some of the larger fellows in the cage reserved for them required the united strength of three men, and Mr. Cross himself had several times to be delivered from the coils of the creatures. The serpents have now commenced to lay eggs, of which there is already a small collection. So large a number of snakes has not been seen before in this country; but the demand for them from zoological societies, snake charmers and others appears to be larger than would be readily imagined.

Silence.

Few persons are aware of the power of silence. Unfortunately the majority of human individuals indulge in a superfluity of words. The "unruly member" has been the cause of the largest part of all the sorrows and quarrels, and the wars that have affected and cursed, humanity. And yet, with all its powers for good or evil, it has not half the eloquence of silence. There is the silence of contempt that withers with magnetic scorn its unfortunate object. There is the silence of despair that is eloquent of sorrow unutterable. There is the silence of joy when the countenance, all aglow with beautifying emotion, needs not the interpretation of speech. There is the silence of speech. There is the silence of disappointment when the relaxed frame, downcast eyes, the mournful visage, tell their tale without words. There is the silence of the deep joy of love, of which arbitrary words fail to give expression, and of which eye-beams and hand-clasps and caresses are the true language. In such "eloquence" Adam welcomed his Eve to the joys and beauties of Paradise, before there were any dressmakers or milliners to mar his happiness.

Literary Notes.

Miss Alice M. Fletcher, of the United States Interior Department and the Peabody Museum, Cambridge, will contribute to the Century in 1892 the results of her studies of the American Indian in a series of illustrated papers. They will give an intimate account of how the Indian actually lives and thinks, his music, home life, warfare, hunting customs, etc., and it is the opinion of Professor Putnam, of Harvard, that they will undoubtedly be the most important papers that have ever been published on the subject, and that they will give an entirely different idea of the Indian from that now commonly prevailing. The series will be called the "Indian's Side."

PALE, drooping girls, worn weary with a burden of disease almost greater than they can bear, should take heart and suffer no longer. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a certain cure for all those diseases peculiar to womankind. They restore the blood, build anew the nerves, and leave happiness and health when used.
