The Castro government cut off outside water supplies to the Guantanamo Naval Base Thursday in an effort to force release of 36 Cuban fishermen held in Florida.

The base has bought water from the nearby Yateras River for many years, receiving two million gallons a day from the Cuban pumping station about 4.7 miles away.

The water from outside reservoirs was cut off at 1:30 p.m. by the U.S. Navy said. The few hours after Havana notified the United States that it would halt the water supply until the fishermen are freed.

The base promptly applied water rationing, but cutting consumption about 75 per cent. The rationing caused concern in Washington, but stirred no concern here for fear of big American naval base at the eastern tip of Cuba or the approximately 10,000 U.S. personnel there.

The navy made plain that Guantanamo has enough water of its own, counting what is already stored, and what can be brought in, to hold out indefinitely.

MATTER UNDER STUDY
Andrew H. Fletcher, assistant U.S. Navy secretary, said President Johnson has asked for a study of the base's water supply.

In the U.S. Congress, there were several calls for big action but there also were recommendations for caution—least until after it is determined clearly whether Cuba is violating the treaty under which the United States holds Guantanamo.

Thomas Mann, assistant secretary for Latin American affairs, contacted an emergency strike fund.

A federal inquiry found that four travelers were being held in the three-mile U.S. territorial limit off the Florida coast Sunday.

Coast Guard turned the ships and all but two of the crew over to Florida authorities for prosecution for violating state fishing laws. Two crew members chose political asylum in the United States.

RELEASE SEVEN
In Key West, Fla., Thursday, a state judge ruled seven of the 36 Cubans because they are under age 17. The other 29 said they would seek legal representation from the Czechoslovak embassy in Havana to represent their interests in the U.S.

The Castro government contends the fishermen were illegally taken to the U.S. territorial waters and has demanded their release along with the ships.

The Guantanamo base has bought water from the nearby Yateras River for many years. Previously the water was supplied by a private company in Cuba. The water rights to the trout ponds were accessible. A park will be developed to add to the beauty of the area.

OTTAWA—Improvements to the pond at Leard's mill have been announced here by Solicitor-General J. Watson MacNaught. Under the water works incentive program, the federal government will contribute $4,000 representing 60 per cent of the labor costs of the project.
