CHAPTER VII.

There were ten "lang Scots miles" betwixt Stourburgh and Jarlishof; and though the pedestrian did not number all the impediments which crossed Tam o' Shanter's path,—for, in a country where there are neither hedges nor stone enclosures, there can be neither "slaps nor stiles,"—yet the number and nature of the "mosses and waters" which he had to cross in his peregrination, were fully sufficient to balance the account, and to render his journey as toilsome and dangerous as Tam o' Shanter's celebrated retreat from Ayr. Neither with nor warlock crossed Mordaunt's path, however. The length of the day was already considerable, and he arrived safe at Jarlishof by eleven o'clock at night. All was still and dark round the mansion, and it was not till he had whistled twice or thrice beneath Swertha's window, that she replied to the signal.

At the first sound, Swertha fell into an agreeable dream of a young whale-fisher, who some forty years since used to make such a signal beneath the window of her hut; at the second, she waked to remember that Johnnie Fea had slept sound among the frozen waves of Greenland for this many a year, and that she was Mr. Mertoun's governe at Jarlishof; at the third, she arose and opened the window.

"Whae is that," she demanded, "at sic an hour of the night?"
"It is I," said the youth.
"And what for comena ye in? The door's on the latch, and there is a gathering peat on the kitchen fire, and a spunk beside it—ye can light your ain candle."
"All well," replied Mordaunt; "but I want to know how my father is."
"Just in his ordinary, gude gentleman—asking for you, Maister Mordaunt; ye are over far and over late in your walks, young gentleman."

"Then the dark hour has passed, Swertha?"
"In troth has it, Maister Mordaunt," answered the governe; "and your father is very reasonably good-natured for him, poor gentleman. I spoke to him twice yesterday without his speaking first; and the first time he answered me as civil as he could do, and the next time he bade me no plague him; and then, thought I, three times were aye canny, so I spake to him again for luck's sake, and he called me a chattering old devil; but it was quite and clean in a civil sort of way."
"Enough, enough, Swertha," answered Mordaunt; "and now get up and find me something to eat, for I have dined but poorly."

"Then you have been at the new folk's at Stourburgh; for there is no another house in the Isles but they wad hae gien ye the best share of the best they had? Saw ye aught of Norma of the Fifal-head? She went to Stourburgh this morning, and returned to the town at night."
"Returned!—then she is here? How could she travel three leagues and better in so short a time?"
"Wha kens how she travels?" replied Swertha; "but I heard her tell the Ranzelman wi' my ain lugs, that she intended that day to have come on to Burgh-Westra, to speak with Minna Troil, but she had seen that at Stourburgh, (indeed she said at Harfra, for she never calls it by the other name of Stourburgh,) that sent her back to our town. But gang your ways round, and ye shall have plenty of supper—ours is nae toom pantry, and still less a locked ane, though my master be a stranger, and no just that tight in the upper rigging, as the Ranzelman says."

Mordaunt walked round to the kitchen accordingly, where Swertha's care speedily accompanied him with a plentiful, though coarse meal, which identified him for the scanty hospitality he had experienced at Stourburgh.

In the morning, some feelings of fatigue made young Mertoun later than usual in leaving his bed; so that, contrary to what was the ordinary case, he found his father in the apartment where they eat, and which served them indeed for every common purpose, save that of a bedchamber or of a kitchen. The son greeted the father in mute reverence, and waited until he should address him.

"You were absent yesterday, Mordaunt?" said his father. Mordaunt's absence had lasted a week and more; but he had often observed that his father never seemed to notice how time passed during the period when he was affected with his sullen vapours. He assented to what the elder Mr. Mertoun had said.

"And you were at Burgh-Westra, as I think?" continued his father.
"Yes, sir," replied Mordaunt.
The elder Mertoun was then silent for some time, and paced the floor in deep silence, with an air of sombre reflection, which seemed as if he were about to relapse into his moody fit. Suddenly turning to his son, however, he observed, in the tone of a query, "Magnus Troil has two daughters—they must be now young women; they are thought handsome, of course?"

"Very generally, sir," answered Mordaunt, rather surprised to hear his father making any inquiries about the individuals of a sex which he usually thought so light of, a surprise which was much increased by the next question, put as abruptly as the former.
"Which think you the handsomest?"
"I, sir?" replied his son with some wonder, but without embarrassment—"I really am no judge—I never considered which was absolutely the handsomest. They are both very pretty young women."
"You evade my question, Mordaunt; perhaps I have some very particular reason for my wish to be acquainted with your taste in this matter. I ask you again, which of Magnus Troil's daughters you think most handsome?"

"Really, sir," replied Mordaunt—"but you only just in asking me such a question."
"Young man," replied Mertoun, with eyes which began to roll and sparkle with impatience, "I never jest. I desire an answer to my question."
"Then, upon my word, sir," said Mordaunt, "it is not in my power to form a judgement betwixt the young ladies—they are both very pretty, but by no means like each other. Minna is dark-haired, and more grave than her sister—more serious, but by no means either dull or sullen."
"Um," replied his father; "you have been gravely brought up, and this Minna, I suppose, pleases you most?"
"No, sir, really I can give her no preference over her sister Brenda, who is as gay as a lamb in a spring morning—less tall than her sister, but so well formed, and so excellent a dancer."

"That she is best qualified to amuse the young man, who has a dull home and a moody father?" said Mr. Mertoun.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Report of Deaf and Dumb Tour.

Sir,—Will you kindly permit me, through your columns, to present a brief report of our recent tour on the Island on behalf of the Halifax Institution for the Deaf and Dumb?

Leaving Halifax on the 4th of August last, accompanied by four of the pupils, we spent four weeks on the Island, during which we held twenty-one meetings, commencing at Charlottetown on the evening of the 5th Aug., proceeding thence through the principal portion of the Island, and holding our farewell meeting in Charlottetown on the evening of the 1st of Sept. Almost everywhere we were favored with large, often crowded, audiences, who evinced much interest in the exercises of the pupils illustrative of the methods and results of the work carried on for the last thirty years in Halifax for the benefit of the deaf mutes of these Maritime Provinces. The fact that for twenty-five years this Institution has been educating deaf mutes for P. E. Island, in most cases free, and the presence among the members of the party of one Island boy from Dundas, doubtless enhanced the interest of the good people of the Island in the object of the deputation. The charming scenery of your beautiful Island, which looked its loveliest during the period of our visit, and the kindness and hospitality so generally extended to the party, have left upon our minds impressions which will not soon be effaced.

The following is a list of the places visited with the amount collected at each:—

Place	Amount
Charlottetown	$11 94
first meeting	17 25
second meeting	51 50
Subscription	51 50
Total	$80 69
New Glasgow	9 50
Cavendish	16 34
New London	21 00
Princeton	20 00
Port Hill	10 00
Alberton	19 53
Kensington	11 16
Summerside	19 65
Centerville	10 40
Tryon	9 43
Crapaud	8 35
Mount Stewart	7 75
St. Peters	11 86
Souris	13 80
Georgetown	15 70
Montague	11 14
Belfast	10 53
Pownal	10 25
Rev. Geo. Steel (annual)	1 00
Rev. J. B. Woodland	1 00
Gross Proceeds	$329 80
Less Expenses	169 13
Net proceeds	$220 67

It would be impossible to enumerate in detail the acts of kindness and hospitality experienced. I can, therefore, only ask our many friends to accept our grateful acknowledgments. I may, however, be permitted to mention our obligations to the Steam Navigation Co. for free passage from Charlottetown to Pictou; the Superintendent of the P. E. Island Railway for favor of special travelling rates; the clergymen of different denominations for their countenance and valuable assistance in arranging for our meetings; the friends who, in many instances, conveyed us from place to place in private conveyances, often at much personal inconvenience at the busiest season of the year; proprietors and trustees of halls and churches for free use of the same; and last, but not least, yourself, Mr. Editor, and the press generally for gratuitous advertising and friendly notice, without which our meetings must have proved a comparative failure; to one and all we desire to tender our warmest thanks.

We trust that some permanent good to the deaf and dumb of the Island may result from our visit, in directing public attention more particularly to their claims, and leading to such legislative action as may secure due provision for their education. We hope your Island may, ere long, follow the example of the sister Province of Nova Scotia, which, by legislative enactment, has decreed free education for her deaf mutes, providing the sum of $120 a year for the support of every deaf child received into the institution at Halifax. Your Island already provides free education for children best with hearing and speech. Let her "logically pursue the argument," and extend the same privilege to the "children of silence," who are unable to lift up a voice in their own behalf.

May we also cherish the hope that the claims of the Halifax Institution on the consideration of the good people of the Island will not be forgotten. For twenty-five years it has been educating your deaf mutes for a mere pittance, having actually expended on their support during that period Ten Thousand Dollars more than has been received from the Island from all sources. In view of this fact, may we not reasonably expect in the future the continued sympathy and more regular aid of the benevolent throughout the Island.

I am, dear sir,
Yours respectfully,
J. SCOTT HUTTON,
Institution for the Deaf and Dumb,
Halifax, N. S., Sept. 27, '87.

From A. H. S. Davis, formerly editor of the Chronicle, Farmington, Me.: "I have used your Adamson's Botanic Balsam, and unhesitatingly pronounce it superior to any medicine of the kind I ever saw. It is simply invaluable as a household remedy for coughs, colds and sore throats. I would not be without it." Trial size 10 cents.
