Queen Victoria's Jubilee.

[WRITTEN FOR THE EXAMINER.]

Through all our Empire vast to-day a voice of greeting sounds,

Born onward to our Sovereign Queen from earth's remotest bounds;

It tells in swelling chorus through many a distant From fair Canadian waters, to India's burning strand.

From every creed and nation that owns her sovereign sway

That voice that speaks an empire's love comes sounding on to-day;

From Erin's emerald valleys fair, and Scotia's mountains grand,

From sweet Australia's ardent clime—it comes from every land

O'er which our triple crosses float, but comes from none, I ween,

With truer love and kinder wish for her, our Than from our own dear Canada, true to the Imperial Home.

Though severed from old England's shores by leagues of ocean foam,

The broad Atlantic rolling wide, from distant strand to strand,

Can lessen not the love we bear for Britain's hallowed land,

Full fifty years have passed away since first a maiden Queen

Ascended Britain's ancient throne with royal splendour shone;

And now to-day the Mother Queen we greet with reverent bow,

This woman's best, most hallowed name, that fits our Sovereign now;

And pure and true is still the heart that beauties As pure as when old England's crown first threw its radiance o'er

The wedding royal maiden's brow, and rested on the head

Of her who kept unstained through life the glory of the dead.

With youthful grace and royal mien she stood before the world,

And Britain gave her love where'er her orbit flame

The lion rampant on her arms kept guard by night and day,

O'er fair Victoria's honor, and held her foes at bay;

And England's ancient hearts of oak more loyal ne'er had been

Than when they knelt with love and pride around a maiden Queen.

But e'er long time they see her, as in youth and beauty bright,

She walks in peerless radiance upon her bridal night;

The royal halls of England with costly splendor shine,

And on our peerless lady's brow bright gems of beauty twine;

Earth's greatest, proudest diadem shines on that queenly brow,

And, could it be, each British heart beats still more loyal now.

For there upon the Sovereign's hand, is one small band of gold,

One simple pledge that binds our hearts with stronger, firmer hold;

Oh! taken of her woman's heart, and of her young love's truth,

She stands before the world again in all her radiant youth,

And though the genius of England shine upon her royal brow,

And Britain's lords of high degree around her forehead bow,

Yet dearer to Victoria's heart is that one simple band.

Than England's crown, or India's wealth or hom- age of the land.

The happy years pass swiftly on in Britain's royal halls,

And o'er Victoria's wedded bliss no shade of sorrow falls;

Till one sad day for England's Queen, when Albert's funeral knell

Rings through her empire vast and wide, a sovereign's woe to tell.

Oh well we loved her when she stood, a maiden Before the world, and claimed our love, with youth's unconscious prayer;

And dearer still unto our hearts when on her She stood in pride of youth and fame, a Queen to glory born.

But never was she loved so well by Britain's sons as then,

When well they knew that love and hope would ne'er be her's again.

And fairer to their eyes was she, clad in her robes of woe,

Than when she walked in garments rare, in youth and beauty's glow.

Old England loved her maiden Queen, and Albert's Royal bride,

But to her widowed Sovereign rushed her whole affection's tide.

And still she holds the love we gave, and even yet more dear

Our nation's Queen becomes to us, with each succeeding year.

And now where stars of India shine on ancient Eastern domes,

"Scientific Dairy Practice."

A REVIEW OF W. H. LYNCH'S NEW BOOK.

W. F. Clarke writes to the Toronto Truth:—Canada has attained a high place in the world's market as a cheese producer.

But she is deplorably behind the times in regard to her butter product. Butter as it is, is the bane and curse of country store-keepers, who are obliged to take large quantities of it in trade, and find the bulk of it is so inferior that when they make a general mix of it, as they are obliged to do, they find that they have got on their hands an inferior article to begin with, which is apt to become no better very fast.

All housekeepers know the difficulty of getting good butter to put on their tables. All boarders are familiar with the wretched grease, a thin spread of which often spoils nice bread, and takes away the appetite.

In winter, especially, we must often go without butter altogether, or eat a salty mess which causes dryness of the throat, and a burning thirst at a time of the year when to drink much water is to invite colic. Now, there is no need for poor butter. The raw material out of which this product is made is provided by nature of such quality that it has only to be properly manipulated to be always a palatable article. There is no chance work about this, although a great many butter-makers appear to think dairying a kind of lottery.

We have before us a book which proves to us that while good butter may be made by rule of thumb, it is this limping rule that is responsible for all the bad butter which affects humanity. Good butter may sometimes be produced hap-hazard; but only by the "rule of reason" can a good result be secured every time. The book to which we refer, and the one of which this series of papers is a review, is entitled "Scientific Dairy Practice," written by W. H. Lynch, of Danville, Quebec, and published with assistance from the Parliament of Canada.

The first part of the book deals with the question of increasing the market value of butter. This is a point interesting both to the producer for the sake of profit, and to the consumer for the sake of quality. Here is what our author says on the question of quality:

"Quality is the first necessity of every marketable product, but it is more than ever a necessity in butter and cheese. Compare one of these products with another farm product, say one of the cereals; compare, for instance, butter with wheat. Wheat is an ordinary necessary; butter is mainly a luxury; it is only as a luxury that it becomes a necessary at all. When it ceases to be a luxury it soon ceases to be a necessary. Butter remains a luxury only so long as its quality is good; when the quality depreciates to a certain degree, the created appetite for it is not satisfied, and demands a substitute or nothing. The demand for butter, therefore, in a far different sense from that of wheat, depends upon the character of the article supplied. In other words upon its quality. To the farmer, then, who would increase his profits, we have to say—IMPROVE THE QUALITY!"

A Sad Case.

Early on Thursday morning, says the St. John Telegraph, a little daughter of Mr. James Lingley, of Indian town, four years of age, was playing with some other little ones in the rear of the yard. A pile of straw had been placed there and some of the children started it with a match. What immediately followed is unknown, but soon Mrs. Lingley was attracted to the window by their screams. Looking out, a horrible sight met her eyes. There near the heap of straw was her little girl enveloped in a mass of flames. Almost frenzied at the sight, she dashed out, and soon had the burning clothing torn from her child, but not before the girl was terribly injured and her own hands very severely burned. Drs. Christie and McLean were at once summoned and did everything possible to assuage the pains of the little sufferer, but after suffering for two days she died on Saturday morning.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung affections, as a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y. oct 26 wky eow
