

FARM NOTES.

(From the American Agriculturist, Oct. 1.)
Potatoes.—The sooner they are dug now the better. It is best to keep them a while either in protected heaps in the field, or on some unused floor. They throw off much moisture within a few days, and will heat if in large heaps or too deep in the bins. When thoroughly dry, they may be placed in secure pits or in the cellar. Potatoes are injured at once by frost, and gradually by sunlight, or even by diffused light. They should, therefore, be kept from the light as much as possible, and decayed ones carefully culled out before they are put away.

Roots are now making their best growth, moderately warm days and cold nights seem to have a great effect upon them. As the time for heavy frosts approaches, secure the mangels and sugar-beets. Top by rubbing the leaves off, not by cutting, as the wound often starts decay, which spoils the beet. Carrots secure attention next after the beets, and turnips next, leaving the Swedish turnips longest. Always protect piles of roots against frost by some covering. Turnips will survive severe freezing, but they are never so good for feeding.

Plowing for Spring crops.—This may be done at any time now, where the soil is not too light, and not likely to wash during the winter. The ground should be left rough to be subjected to the fallow action of the weather, freezing, thawing, wetting, drying, etc. Should a crop of weeds come up, it will very likely pay to harrow and plow again.

No well should be dug at a less distance than 300 feet from a barn-yard, cesspool, or privy vault.

Action of Lime on the Soil.—Lime, as it comes from the kiln, is known as caustic or quick lime,—the heat having expelled the carbonic acid gas of the carbonate of lime or lime stone. Upon exposure to the air and moisture this caustic lime absorbs water and carbonic acid gas, and again returns to the carbonate. During the revision it decomposes vegetable matter and sets the elements of plant food free. It is in this power to prepare food for the growing crop from the vegetable matter in the soil that the chief value of lime resides. The greater the per cent of the lime that is in the caustic state, the more valuable it is for this work. The quicker the lime can be applied after burning the better.

Plant Economy.—Plants, like animals, can live on inferior food, but where it is abundant will select the best. Where food is lacking in quantity plants will contract their growth and devote all the food that is possible to the production of the offspring—the seed. It is a well-known fact that anything which checks the growth of the plant tends to make it flower first, and if possible produce seed. It seems as if the plant realizes that its own life is in danger and takes the shortest cut to the reproduction of its kind; and in so doing often pinches itself and is very economical for the sake of future generations.

Composting is the art of mixing organic matter, such as straw, muck, dead animals, etc., that must undergo decomposition before they become available as plant food, with organic matter that will absorb and retain the vegetable gasses that the organic matter would otherwise let pass into the air and thus be lost. Such a mixture must be kept moist, but not exposed to rains that would wash away the valuable soluble salts. Stable manure and muck make an excellent basis for a compost heap, with which ashes, leached and fresh lime, weeds (not in seed), waste matters, etc., can be mixed.
