THE MANAGER'S SAFE.

The manager gazed first at the bond, then at the boy. The bewilderment in the great man's face gave way to a curious smile.

"You are right," he said at last. "I will take care of it." They descended from the cab a few yards off Gaze's Tourist Office, and the manager paid the driver.

"You know what you have to do," said he to Aspin, pointing to the name over the door. "I will wait for you here."

When the clerk emerged again from Messrs. Gaze's, he handed one of the two tickets he had purchased to the manager, who said quickly:

"Good-by! And, by the way, remember that I shall follow you now and see you off—from a distance." Next morning Mr. Aspin was in Paris. There the devil in him revived to some extent. He determined to spend a couple of days in the "City of Pleasure," and to have a spree. Had not the manager promised to throw every one off the scent?

Meantime the manager strolled down to Scotland Yard. There he gave his reasons for believing that a theft of valuable bonds had taken place. It was impossible to say how and by whom they had been abstracted. He desired that an able detective should return with him to the city, to make an investigation and give his advice. The request was promptly complied with.

Shortly before 3 o'clock the manager entered the bank, accompanied by two detectives from the Criminal Investigation Department—namely, Inspector Crump, and an officer in plain clothes, they were met by the cashier with the significant announcement that young Mr. Aspin had not returned after his dinner hour.

"There can be no doubt," added Mr. Price, "that our suspicions of him were well founded."

The manager and chief detective retired to the sanctum of the former. Mr. Price and the second officer were asked to hold themselves in readiness for a summons to join them.

The circumstances already entailed in the conversation between the manager and the cashier were forthwith communicated to the Inspector. The manager, moreover, opened the safe, and described how the various parcels of bonds brought from the strong room had been laid in a row on the middle shelf, and how he had perceived, immediately after Mr. Aspin had left the room, a gap in the row where Messrs. Bulling & Co.'s script had been laid. The inspector was then requested to make a careful survey of the room and its contents.

While he was doing this, the manager deftly slipped a paper from his pocket into the leaves of a ledger within the safe, much in the same manner, it will be remembered, as he had acted with another packet. Having done this, he "swung to" the door, which fastened with a snap.

During this operation, Inspector Crump was looking in the opposite direction. But he was doing so to some purpose; for he saw the movements of the manager clearly reflected in the ground glass partition separating the apartment from the general office. There was something about the manager's action which fixed the circumstance in his mind.

The detective next interviewed the cashier, whose story confirmed that of his superior officer. Now the duty of the detective was done. Even if there remained a doubt as to Mr. Aspin's guilt, it was absolutely necessary to discover what had become of that young gentleman, in the office; but no one could offer a clue to the missing clerk's movements.

"He has probably made for the Continent," suggested the manager. "Do you think so, sir?" asked Inspector Crump, in reply, while he looked in the face of the banker. "If so, we will soon overtake him; he has not much more than an hour's start of the legless man." And the detective laughed. The idea appeared to impress the manager.

"The law has a long arm—eh, Mr. Crump?" "Yes, sir—particularly in dealing with boys who have short heads," said the detective, eyeing the manager steadily. "I hope you'll prove a match for him," said the manager with a smile.

"By the-by, I suppose he couldn't make anything out of the bonds in this country?" "It is very unlikely." "Do you think, sir, that he had any money about him to go away with?" "I cannot say, but I'll inquire."

The answer brought by Mr. Price to this inquiry was one that provoked a hearty laugh. "Mr. Aspin was 'hard up.' He was always 'hard up.' He had borrowed half-a-crown that very morning to pay for his dinner."

After some further information as to Mr. Aspin's affairs had been asked for by Mr. Crump, and given to him, that gentleman decided to make inquiries of Mrs. Aspin, and to have that lady's house watched in case her son should return home.

"I will cause a description of young Aspin to be circulated in order that he may be traced, watched, and if possible, arrested. All this will keep us occupied until tomorrow morning, when you may expect me here to report progress. I will leave my companion with you. He may be wanted."

Inspector Crump departed, after whispering to his comrade the curious admonition: "Watch the manager. If he hasn't got the bonds himself, my name's not Crump!"

When Mr. Bulling, of Messrs. Bulling & Company, called for their securities, an explanation was given for not delivering them which bore all the appearance of good faith. The fact of the theft was more unfortunate than alarming, for, of course, the bank would make good the loss. Under the unhappy circumstances, Messrs. Bulling & Company consented to fall in with the bank's convenience, and to wait until the lost property should be recovered, while the manager, on behalf of the directors, offered temporary security to the owners of the bonds—an offer which they considered unnecessary, in view of the status of the bank.

The supposition you expressed, sir, has been fully justified. The young man suspected of stealing the bonds crossed to Calais yesterday. I have arranged that he will not slip through our fingers. I cannot say more at present. The first information which I obtained concerning him was given by Messrs. Gaze, the tourist agents, at whose office he bought two tickets for Madrid. From the fact of his taking two tickets, it is presumed that he is travelling in company with a female, possibly an accomplice. He paid Messrs. Gaze with a fifty-pound note, of which I have taken the number. The question is, where did he get the fifty-pound note? Can you tell me?"

"At first the manager made no reply, and he averted his eyes under the steady, but seemingly frank regard of the detective. Then, laboring under evident excitement, he stepped over to the safe, opened it, drew out a little drawer within, and exclaimed:

"What do you mean, sir?" "I had a fifty-pound note in this drawer." He referred to his pocket-book for the number and read it out. The detective smiled as he announced that his figures were the same. The directors looked at one another meaningly, being full of sympathy for their head officer.

(To be Continued.) Don't Stuff a Cold. If you do you will, nine times in ten, have a fever to starve. A cold is a shock received by the myriad nerves that bristle over the surface of a human body. This shock is transmitted to the nerve centres, and then back to the mucous membranes, forcing a great amount of blood to these membranes, creating a more or less severe irritation, and consequent rise in the temperature, followed by chills. Excess of food in the stomach still more increases the temperature; and, worst of all, helps clog the secretions or natural outlets of the body. It is high time we broke away from an old notion which, like some others, has done more harm than good. For example, in years past how many poor fever sufferers, burning with an internal fire and thirst, were hurried to an unwholesome grave because not allowed cooling drinks or a bit of ice by the old time treatment for fevers, as foolish as the usage for fools. At last one cunning delirious patient got to a pump of cold water and drank his fill; determined not to leave until the well ran dry, he choked the fever, re-appeared, and doctors learned a lesson. Experimenting with a severe cold, a dangerous custom, as most persons try one remedy only until some friend gives cats another "sure cure," as Mark Twain so humorously describes. When slight hoarseness or tightness of the nasal membranes warns one of a skin expulser or cold from wet, act promptly; a delay is dangerous. With children it may mean croup and strangulation; with adults, catarrh, bronchitis, perhaps pneumonia. If neglected, nothing can prevent the sneezing, red nose and voice bygone look of a person with a cold. Scores of mothers would as soon go to bed without snaps in the house as without that old-fashioned remedy, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, near at hand for croupy children. Used with a mild laxative, as described in a pamphlet, which I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass., will send free to anyone. Johnson's Liniment will cure a cold for adults quicker than any known remedy. A mild, nutritious diet, a gentle physic to open the secretions, and a bottle of that old anodyne from your druggist, will conquer any cold. Johnson's Anodyne Liniment was originated by an old family physician more than seventy years ago.

The editor of the Titton, G. A. Gazette scratched the following lines with his poetic pen: "Backward, turn backward, O time, in thy flight; give us July again, just for one night; give us mosquitoes and give us the flies, but turn on some heat before every one dies! Bring back our straw hats and our green pants; give us a chance to live, give us a chance."

"I consider," said the new man on the staff, deeply hurt, "that I have been snubbed. I am much full of unwritten editorials, and they've sent me out to write up the home-made pie industry."

Don't Wait for the Sick Room. The experience of physicians and the public proves that taking Scott's Emulsion produce an immediate increase in flesh; it is, therefore, of the highest value in wasting disease and consumption.

"I suppose," said the householder to the plumber, "that with the departure of winter your profits cease." "Not at all," said the plumber. "I am the owner of a patent tonic to cure the spring fever."

Dr. Koch's cure for consumption went up like a rocket and came down like a stick; but Patten's Emulsion still shines with undimmed lustre as the best remedy for wasting disease and consumption.

Druggist—I got stuck on this lot of court plaster. It's no good. Friend—If it's no good I don't see how you can get stuck on it.

A Brockville Druggist's Case

BROCKVILLE, April 24th.—The popular impression is that doctors and druggists seldom take their own medicine. This is no more true, but when a doctor takes ill he generally calls in one of his own profession, in whose skill he has every confidence, or when a druggist is in a similar situation, he often puts his faith in the preparations of some other chemist which he knows give good results. Both the doctors and druggists in such cases show their good sense.

A case in point happened in this town a short time ago. Mr. F. M. Turner, the well known and popular druggist, who is now travelling for Parke, Davies & Co. has for a long time been a sufferer from congestion and inflammation of the kidneys. He tried a great many remedies, but without results. His patrons, however, spoke so highly of D.odd's Kidney Pills that he was induced to try them. He now states that he is completely cured, and to your correspondent he said that as a rule he had very little faith in patent medicines, but that for the cure of kidney troubles, rheumatism, backache, etc., he does not know of any remedy that is giving such good results as D.odd's Kidney Pills.

Young King Alexander of Servia, who at seventeen has seized hold of the reins of government, is a broad shouldered boy of medium height, rather handsome and unusually intelligent. He is energetic and self-willed, and for his years unpleasantly cynical. At the time of the boy's coup d'etat his disreputable father was enjoying the pleasures which kings in exile pursue in Paris.
