

Iraq To Have New Premier

BAGHDAD, Iraq (Reuters) — King Faisal asked pro-Western Senator Ali Jawdat to form a new government.
Jawdat, 64, who has been premier before, is a supporter of the anti-Communist Baghdad Pact and has been Iraqi ambassador in London and Washington.
He will succeed Premier Nuri Ali Said, six times premier and architect of the Baghdad Middle East defence pact who announced he does not wish to continue in office for health reasons. Nuri has been reported planning to go to Europe June 20 for a medical checkup.
Nuri served six separate terms as premier in the last 27 years. During his last term, which started in 1954, he drew up the Baghdad Pact, which now includes Britain, Iraq, Turkey, Iran and Pakistan as full members with the United States as a close associate.
Jawdat took part in the Arab revolt of 1916 against the Ottoman Empire. On the establishment of the Iraqi government in 1921, he returned from Syria to start an active life in politics.
