THE WRONG TARGET

South in the following deal was so sure that his side had missed a slam—and probably was so annoyed over the "fact"—that he played the actual contract as though it had been a slam.

South dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

West made his natural lead, the queen of hearts, and when the dummy went down South took one look and said, "One of us didn't bid enough partner." Having delivered this somewhat bitter (and inaccurate) remark, he ruffed the opening lead in dummy and cashed two high trumps, preparatory to drawing a third round and then running off the six-card diamond suit. When East refused at the second trump lead, however, South was in great trouble, and instead of making six-odd he went down one.

It is true that the combined resources of North and South made a slam an excellent investment, but since the actual contract was only four spades, South should have been more realistic. Instead of depending on a trump break—as he would have had to do at a slam—he should have thrown every possible safeguard around the game contract.

The correct play at Trick 2 was a trump to the ten. This would guard against the possibility that East had four trumps to the jack, and, more pertinently, would also guard against the same holding by West. Observe that even though this finesse would lose, West could not make a damaging return. An other heart lead could be well controlled by dummy, and South then could draw trumps and run the diamonds without interruption. Any other return by West after taking his trump jack would be equally satisfactory to South.

Thus, the immediate concession of a trump trick, though probably unnecessary, was an excellent safety play.

DOROTHY DIX Workers All

DEAR MISS DIX: My husband is 52 and I am 41. He doesn't have much education and I just went through grammar school. We have five children; the oldest two are married. The children with us work after school. I work and, of course, so does my husband. The home as well as possible, since my husband's wages just about cover our living expenses. The youngsters want to have a nice home and they willingly contribute part of their earnings to new furniture, rugs, curtains, etc. Thanks to their help, we do have a very pleasant place.

However my husband is annoyed when we buy anything. He says if he can't afford it we should do without, and that we're going over his head when we buy something without consulting him. I know that if we asked him first, he'd make such a fuss that we'd never get the particular item we want. Our expenditures are anything but extravagant but I do believe the children are entitled to home surroundings, especially since they're willing to shoulder the expense.

Myra T.

BLESSED WITH CONSIDERATE CHILDREN

ANSWER: You've raised a fine family, Myra, and you are certainly doing the right thing in giving the children as attractive a home as possible. I can appreciate your husband's attitude; he probably feels self-conscious over the fact that he isn't earning more money and can't supply his family with luxuries. However, he is far more blessed with considerate children than he would be with a higher-paying job.

Your youngsters' appreciation of nice things should be encouraged. You are a sensible and perceptive person; I think if you continue your efforts you'll be able to cajole hubby into appreciating them, too. Point out how much prettier a room is with attractive curtains; then coax him to go along on a shopping expedition for a rug, or curtains for another room, or paper for the walls. If you can break his pride down a bit, he'll be only too happy to be a part of the refurbishing plans.

DEAR MISS DIX: I'm a girl of 19, in love with a boy 18. Because of this age difference I foresee many difficulties. My parents know of it, but his folks don't. Do you think they should be told?

Mabel D.

ANSWER: Concealing this bit of information will have far more disastrous results than the revelation will bring forth. The age difference is relatively unimportant, but the boy's people would be right in objecting to deliberate deceit. You may have to take an occasional bit of kidding about your ages, but I'm sure you can pass that off. Actually, the important point here is that a boy of 18 is too young to be tied down to an engagement.

THE CONTROL OF VITAMIN B12

Soon after the discovery of vitamin B12 it became clear that this agent will greatly help a patient with pernicious anemia. This help is comparable in every day to the effects produced by the powerful action of liver extracts. The effectiveness of vitamin B12 for continuous treatment in this disease remained to be demonstrated. At the present time most investigators agree that the crystalline vitamin has proved at least as effective as potent liver extracts during the three to four years since it became available for general use. There is still more difference of opinion as to the best size of dosage and the intervals between injections.

Early in 1950, Drs. Douglas G. Cameron, S. R. Townsend, and A. English, McGill University Clinic of the Montreal General Hospital began the study of the effectiveness of potent liver extracts in 63 cases of pernicious anemia. Most of the patients had been under observation for 10 to 20 years with satisfactory results. During the past three years, these observers have used crystalline vitamin B12 in continuous treatment in 28 cases of pernicious anemia by intramuscular injection at weekly intervals. These results were entirely satisfactory and similar to their experience with liver extract.

Fifty patients with pernicious anemia, volunteered for the present study, 32 women and 18 men, their ages ranging from 44 to 83. All of them had responded promptly to early treatment and were in a state of remission, that is, the pernicious anemia was held under control or in check from the beginning of treatment. Forty-eight had been treated with liver extract weekly by injection into the muscles. Twenty-six were selected at random from this group and were given vitamin B12 in doses of 30 µg weekly instead of the liver extract. Vitamin B12 was also given to two cases who had been using it before. The remaining 22 patients served as controls and continued to receive their usual doses of liver extract.

What are the results of this study? None of the patients had symptoms of anemia at the start of the study and none had symptoms at the conclusion. The final red blood cell count and the hemoglobin levels were satisfactory.

These good results are the reason vitamin B12 is being used widely for the continuous (maintenance, as it is called) treatment of pernicious anemia. Several authoritative reports indicate its value in maintaining normal levels of hemoglobin and in preventing the nervous complications which sometimes accompany this disease.

ELLEN'S DIARY

by an Island Farmer's Wife

Today however, by the purchase of a pure bred sire in a rather distant community, the herd of this place is once more complete. Not that this farm "goes registered" to any great extent but it is surprising and quite satisfying too to the owner, how soon from small beginnings the years can prosper and increase a herd. . . . James has a notion that in such undertakings of the farming it is better to operate so, to give one an opportunity to gain experience in the husbandry of it as fortunes progress. The new animal was not given his predecessor's stall so that now the women and children may visit the kittens without dread of the nearness of one of these hazards of the farm.

There are leaves in the oven at the moment, their baking delayed beyond the usual hour because of an engagement which took us away from the place. The aroma comes to us here in this upstairs room. It is a scent of old kitchens and good eating and old ways in danger now of being lost to modern habits of living.

We had to postpone the baking because of an invitation to attend granddaughter's birthday supper in the house across the lane at Alderlea. She is eight years today. The waifs of cherry trees at the bottom of the little garden there are shedding their petals, scattering them like spring snowflakes on the ground about. Gage preferred to cycle the distance. That would bring him there more quickly to join the other children at play. So it was Jamie who accompanied us, walking by choice along the mile of fields or thereabout which lie now in June freshness between. By the pasturing young cattle of that farm we came; through new meadow and grain-land; along virgin land ready to be cultivated. And then by a patch of it greening now with grain, we entered a woodland road.

That path is bordered richly with woods' plants, a number now in delicate blossom, with moss and fern and bracken making up the warp and woof of a lovely woods' pattern of June.

"You're forgetting something, aren't you?" Jamie smiled, eyes on a far horizon. "The church spire? Do you see it?"

There it was in familiar and significant silhouette against the sunny blue beyond. But nearer, indeed not far from us now, were the buildings of home. And waiting in the farm-lane. . . . James to accompany us there.

In the past year, granddaughter has added almost two inches to her height but very little extra to her weight, a condition which may right itself when given the leisure of school-holidays. . . . This afternoon her two grandmothers were present to share her happiness at reaching this pleasant milestone.

"Ellen!" It is James calling. Perhaps it's only my imagination. . . . But I believe I smell something burning. Is there something in the oven?"

Until tomorrow - - - - -

Q. If one is in doubt as to whether an invitation can be accepted, how should the acknowledgment be worded?

A. The acknowledgment must state definitely whether the invitation is accepted or regretted. It is imperative always that a decision be reached before answering.

Q. If a bride displays all her wedding gifts should she leave the cards attached to them?

A. This is entirely optional. She must be careful, though, to have a complete identification of each gift before removing any cards.

Q. When one has finished eating cereal, should the spoon be left in the cereal bowl?

A. No; place it on the saucer under the bowl.

For Tomorrow
JUDGMENT and self-control will be required if you are to make this a successful year. The influences prevail bringing with them tendencies toward dissension, carelessness and stormy emotional scenes. Try, therefore, to avoid situations which could produce discord.

In occupational affairs, go out of your way to please elders and superiors since these persons, especially, may be inclined toward irritability.

On the good side of the ledger, the aspects continue to favor courtship, romance and travel. Pleasant matters on which to concentrate at that!

For the Birthday

If tomorrow is your birthday, your horoscope indicates excellent prospects for the year ahead. The indications favor achievement of long-sought professional goals, but with them may come an environmental change.

There is emphasis, too, on new business ventures but, even though their outcome could be surprisingly successful, it would be inadvisable to go beyond your depth. Enthusiasm and optimism should be tempered with good judgment.

Finances should prosper during the next six months, and plans made for travel at this time should culminate happily. Domestic matters and romance should also prosper.

A child born on this day will be talented, extremely versatile and imaginative.

A Sick Child

First Aid and Home Nursing (St. John Ambulance)

Looking after a sick child requires infinite patience and understanding. The way you do it is important as well as what you do, says the St. John Ambulance Home Nursing course.

Without understanding the reason, children react and become frightened when adults show anxiety and tension by their expressions and actions. Children need reassurance and security at all times but especially in the midst of a strange experience such as illness. Just as they react to anxiety and fear so will they respond to calm authority.

While love and affection are necessary when a child is ill, discretion should be used because it is very easy to spoil the sick child, particularly if the illness lasts a long time.

Because the child is growing physically and mentally and developing all the time it is very necessary to continue normal routine with as few interruptions as possible and to re-establish the usual pattern of eating, sleeping, elimination and play as quickly as convalescence permits.

Play is especially important to the convalescent child — just as vital as food and sleep. However, it should be suited to the nature of the illness, with care to avoid over-excitement and fatigue.

Measures such as the following will do much to help secure the co-operation of the child during illness.

1. Approach the child with a friendly, assured manner and take it for granted that the treatment will be accepted willingly and bravely.
2. Tell the child what you are going to do and give warning that it may hurt. Never lie to a child about the discomfort involved because trust and confidence may be shaken or destroyed.
3. Always be a child when brave but don't scold when he is not.

Quiet-Spoken Senator from N.B. Is Crusader on Women's Behalf

By John Mosher
Canadian Press Staff Writer
FREDERICTON (CP)—Senator Muriel McQueen Ferguson, quiet-spoken crusader for women's participation in public life, has seen the realization of a principle she long advocated — the right of women to serve on New Brunswick Juries.

This was enacted at the last legislative session. Mrs. Ferguson said in an interview she would have preferred that women be called for jury service in the same way as men but with the privilege of refusing, but with the privilege of Home Nursing course.

Without understanding the reason, children react and become frightened when adults show anxiety and tension by their expressions and actions. Children need reassurance and security at all times but especially in the midst of a strange experience such as illness. Just as they react to anxiety and fear so will they respond to calm authority.

"Now we are not considered too unintelligent for jury duty," commented New Brunswick's outstanding representative of her sex in public affairs. The subject recalled her interest in the famous struggle of 1929 to get women classified as "persons" under the British North America Act so that they could be appointed to the Senate.

Next Thing Must
The next thing she would like to see in the way of legislation on behalf of women is "equal pay for equal value."

Still dark-haired and attractive at 55, the energetic, blue-eyed senator is a woman of "firsts"—the first woman senator from New Brunswick, first woman member of the Fredericton city council, first woman to have been judge of probate in this province and first woman in Canada to have been appointed enforcement counsel for a province under the wartime prices board.

From 1947 until her Senate appointment a year ago she was regional welfare administrator for the federal health department. She has found the Senate "extremely interesting and the associations stimulating." While some members were well along in years "their brains are not gone. They are still brilliant and outstanding and it is a privilege to know them."
