P.E.I. Fisheries was such a shortage of food elsewhere in the world. He also said here could be far more productive than it is, and more so than the land because the relative costs are lower. He also called attention to the fact that the protein values of seafood are greater than those of land produce.

ALL COASTLINE PRODUCTIVE The speaker stated that every one of 1,000 miles of Island coastline could be productive and said there were many sections of it that were never even touched. He attributed the excellent quality of fish found in our waters to the runoff of dioxines and organisms from the soil. It was this, he said, which made the Gulf fisheries so successful.

Mr. Gorman noted that in the past 25 to 30 years the former fishing grounds were lost as the fish seemed to be more and more into northern waters and in recent years the Gulf of St. Lawrence had become more important with trawlers from France, the United States, Portugal and other countries being seen frequently. He recalled that the past war had seen vast strides made in the field of medicine and other scientific areas and said that the great increases in world population made necessary a vast increase in food production which had fallen behind as the world population exploded in its increase.

PRODUCTION NEEDED In his opening remarks Mr. Gorman said he was very happy to hear that the conversations held regarding both agriculture and fisheries were laid against a background of the need for increased production. Mr. Gorman also reminded the fishermen present of the old days when you could walk across Alberton Harbour on the decks of the many fishing vessels there. Many of them, he stated, were from the United States when the vessels used to come from that country to catch the fall mackerel. He felt there should be no fear of any loss in fisheries, but on the contrary there was a bright outlook if people paid more attention and invested more in the industry.

Potatoes and Turnips "We have greatly increased the number of customers in sales of seed and table potatoes and turnips. During the past season we have loaded six boat cargoes of table and seed potatoes and several part cargoes. The returns from both turnips and potatoes were very low to our growers. The returns would have been much lower if the P. E. I. Marketing Board had not received an agreement with the Dominion Government which returned a much higher price to the grower than could have been realized on the open market. This system of marketing imposed a heavy financing problem on your central and local co-ops. Both ourselves and our local co-ops will have to be prepared this season to meet this problem. "For instance we invoiced some $95,000.00 of bags to our local co-ops last September. We had to carry these bags for months before we finally got paid for them. This extra financing was a strain at times. A low price year is always difficult to operate in. Nevertheless, we came through fairly well. We also developed a number of new customers for P. E. I. seed potatoes who formerly had not been using them.
